

GOSSIPS AGAIN ARE SELECTING WALES' BRIDE

Princess Ingrid of Sweden, Now in Britain, Named as Next Queen.

By United Press
LONDON, Oct. 20.—Tea-table gossip is turning once more to its favorite topic—the possible marriage of the prince of Wales.

Presence in England of Princess Ingrid of Sweden has swelled the volume of this chatter and increased the rumors, for none can gainsay that of all Europe's royal princesses, Ingrid is the most eligible as mate to the heir of the British throne.

Princess Ingrid is staying at Bagshot park, country seat of her grandfather, the duke of Connaught, uncle to King George.

It is but one of her annual visits to England, and she is enjoying her time in usual vacation pleasures.

This time, however, those who like to think they are in the know, see more in Ingrid's visit than a mere holiday.

But they will be disappointed if they expected any official confirmation of their conjectures, because even if there were any truth in them—and so far there is not—they would be denied until the details of the engagement definitely had been settled.

Yet these royal matchmakers continue to talk, and it must at least be said that there is logic in their conversation.

There could be no bar to such a marriage on religious grounds, for Ingrid is one of the few unmarried princesses in Europe of Protestant faith.

Rumors linking the names of the prince of Wales with one or the other of the daughters of the king and queen of Spain, the king always have been discredited because the Spanish royal family is Roman Catholic, while the British is Protestant.

Ingrid has been carefully trained in cooking and house-keeping. She plays the violin, is fond of theaters, loves opera and is extremely widely-read.

She is an excellent sportswoman, tennis, swimming, golf and motoring are among her recreations.

It is said that when she applied for an automobile-driving license, undergoing the same test as ordinary applicants, the examiners wrote: "She is much better than the average pupil and is very cool and unperturbed at the wheel."

Recently she took up flying. While on her present visit to England she is expected to make her debut in the hunting field, and will probably go out with the quorn, a pack with which the prince of Wales often hunts.

The princess has all the appearance and regal bearing which would be required of a future queen of England.

She was 20 last April, and was one of the first royal women to have her hair shingled.

Her hair, flaxen when she was a schoolgirl, now is best described as ashen blonde.

She has a cupid's bow mouth, the heavy eyelids of a dreamer, wide dark unlined eyebrows, and a soft round face.

She is tall and slim, carries her clothes well, and has an exceptionally good taste. Her reserved manner already has a regal touch about it.

Wrestling Lesson Injures Actress

Elsie Janis

By United Press
HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 20.—Elsie Janis, former stage star and now a writer for the screen, carried her arm in a sling today as the result of an unsuccessful attempt to give a wrestling lesson to Ramon Navarro, the film star.

"It was just too ridiculous," Miss Janis said in explaining how she received the painful, but not serious, injury.

She and Navarro were "clowning" at her home, she said.

"I was just about ready to claim victory when he gave his body a slight twist and my shoulder slipped out of place," Miss Janis explained.

Miss Janis, who gained fame for her stage entertainments for the soldiers in France during the World War, has forsaken the drama to write scenarios for talking picture productions.

Marked to Die, Legs Forced to 'Go on'—No Hiding From Gang Foes

At Least Dozen Persons Out to 'Get' Him; Who Shot Him So Far Is Mystery.

This is the last of a series of three articles on the rise and fall of Jack (Legs) Diamond, notorious New York gangster.

By GENE COHN
NEA Service Writer

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—When a racketeer gets into the "big time," a chart of his ramified interests would closely resemble the myriad branches of a family tree.

His life becomes even as the subterranean honeycombs of underground Chinatown; one dank, dark lane leading to another, with mysterious doorways known only to the initiate.

And so it was that the Jack who would be king soon found, even as kings have found, that circumstances and necessities demanded expansion of territory, shrewd trading and political manipulation.

Expansion in gangdom, as in kingdoms, breeds war. And war it was—a life for a life, and two lives for one!

It was inevitable that Jack (Legs) Diamond must wear, with his assumed regal robes, the suspicion of a "killer."

Up in his Catskill mountain hideaway he was a racketeer Robin Hood—the fellow who, even though he robbed others, helped the poor.

Around Acra, a tiny hamlet in the midst of rolling hills, they told of how he built roofs for the poor and took children to the store and sent them home loaded with candy.

They claimed that, when the good priest of his church "spurned" ill-gotten money, Diamond arranged that the money would seem to come from other sources.

This mountain retreat served both as a residence and a hideaway for fellows menaced by alien guns.

Perhaps it was even more than that—for the beer racket had gone right up the Hudson river to Albany, with quaint, historic towns as depots.

Anything "this side" of the Hudson was accepted as Diamond territory. There were other larger beer kingdoms in New Jersey and Brooklyn.

Diamond bore the reputation of a racketeer who tried to "muscle in" on the other fellow's grounds.

The beer racket was but one of which his name had been linked. The drug trade, the hotel business, a piece in one or more night clubs, an interest in the recently popular "kidnaping ransom" racket were other alleged activities. He appeared to be a jack of all nefarious trades.

"The split" on the many rackets was terrific. Everywhere Diamond "turned," one man wanted a "cut."

As profitable as was his game, it was not "the big money," and you will hear all over Broadway that his checks had been bouncing for many a day.

Diamond with all his scheming and plotting and manipulation had not quite chimed himself to the Croesus-like pinnacle of a Rothstein.

There were beer barons in Brooklyn and Jersey who, according to all legends, rolled in money.

Was the ambitious Diamond out to capture this lucrative beer territory?

Was he moved down because he tried too hard to push his way into other lands?

Such is likely to be the solution of his mystery shooting—if solution there is.

But while all this checker-board play had been going on, while all the background of beer-running and territory-splitting and gang growling was underworld gossip—Jack Diamond was playing his "outer" role.

His name continued to appear in the newspapers and, even as his rapper, immaculate groomed figure, walked across the front pages, Diamond was seldom long out of the public eye.

Whenever any evil was afoot the public would say, "Get Diamond!" This was manna from his particular heaven. It made him important, at least to himself.

But in police circles he was branded as nothing more nor less than a "cowardly killer."

ANNA URBAS, sweetheart of the slain Red Moran, who "knew too much," was found strangled in a river. And next came the Hotzy Totsy murders. Diamond was said to be part owner of the Hotzy Totsy Club.

About two years ago a big party was in progress there, and Diamond was playing bartender. In the crowd were Red Cassidy and Simon Walker. With Diamond was one Charles Entrafra, a henchman.

The revelry suddenly was halted by shots and shrieks. On the floor in separate pools of blood lay Cassidy and Walker.

Officials found most of the jokers suffering from loss of memory, but later declared that a secret investigation had proved Diamond to be the killer.

Two persons who might have been key witnesses were found dead in a New Jersey swamp a short time afterward.

So when Diamond disappeared, but one day weeks later came walking dapperly into police headquarters with a perfect alibi, he was dismissed.

So it went—plot within plot—until, marked for death, he tried an escape to Europe. When that failed he tried hiding in his Catskill castle. But he had to "go on"—live or die.

And when he came into New York again it was to get in touch at once with one of his favored beauties—a certain Marion Stranick, who changed her name to Roberts for stage purposes.

The rest of the story must be ended by time. Perhaps a dozen persons were "out to get" Dia-

BREAK DENIED BY W. C. T. U.

Leaders Declare Statement by 'Leader' Has No Basis.

The anonymous W. C. T. U. leader who Saturday predicted a bolt from the Anti-Saloon League's slate of approved candidates was "of an officer of the Central W. C. T. U., the latter's chief declared in a statement today.

A statement signed by Mrs. W. W. Brady, president; Mrs. Burton Shields, vice-president; Mrs. Dean Craft, corresponding secretary; Mrs. William Paulsen, recording secretary; and Mrs. R. H. White, treasurer, of Central W. C. T. U. said:

"As far as we know the W. C. T. U. is not issuing a slate of candidates, made by some person evidently lacking courage to publish her name, according to The Times states she is head of a W. C. T. U. union.

"Since this article has included all unions in Marion county, we the official board of Central W. C. T. U., the largest union in Indiana, wish to state that as far as we are informed this union is supporting these candidates, namely Mr. Winkler and Judge Bash."

'CAT WOMAN' OF GARY ATTACKED AND STRANGLED

Body Found Near Bag of Food for Pets; Cops Hunt Negro.

By United Press
GARY, Ind., Oct. 20.—A search for food for her two cats led Mrs. Mary Janovich, 68, to her death Sunday.

Her body was found in a deserted building less than a block from her home by two women who visited the place, intending to lease it.

Nearby was a paper sack filled with meat scraps which the aged woman, known as the "cat woman," had picked from garbage cans in alleys, as was her daily custom.

Police discredited the belief that robbery was the motive for the slaying, when it was learned that the woman virtually was penniless and had been assaulted before she was strangled to death.

Today, Inspector A. S. Woods, head of the police department, conducted personally a search for the attacker, whom he believed to be a Negro moron.

WORKER IS CRUSHED

Heavy Timber Falls; Man's Back May Be Broken.

Struck by a heavy timber as it fell fourteen feet, John Moran, 55, of 1808 East New York street, working on a new building at 1800 West Morris street, was injured critically today.

Indiana Christian hospital physicians say his back probably is broken.

Moran, an employee of the J. G. Karstadt Company, contractors, 622 Builders building, was standing almost beneath the 300-pound timber as it fell.

Wet Aspirant Steps Out of Race for Congress

Sampell Withdraws From Contest, With Blast at Dry League.

Indiana's only independent avowed wet candidate for representative, Warren Sampell, withdrew from the race today, with a verbal castigation of "moral cowards and the Anti-Saloon League."

Sampell's withdrawal was said to be viewed with disfavor by the Republican county organization, which believed he would draw votes from Louis Ludlow, Democratic candidate for re-election, as many Democrats are wet.

Promised support, financial and moral, was not forthcoming and he has decided to retire from the field, he said.

Declaring he is withdrawing "very reluctantly," Sampell said:

"I still believe there is a preponderance of sentiment in this district for a modification of our prohibition laws. But as long as proponents are apathetic, just so long will the Anti-Saloon League rule in Indiana."

"Many citizens will say 'I'm for you, boy, but my name must not be used.' Citizens of that type are moral cowards."

"There is much political significance to the prohibition issue. When the law is modified, one of the major parties will want to take full credit. The one to get it will be the party that withdraws from Anti-Saloon domination."

"That organization recently published the names of candidates it would back. I can say with perfect propriety that there are many names on that list that seem drawn to the sophisticated when linked to the Anti-Saloon League. There were names of men seeking judgeships who neither keep nor respect the prohibition laws."

Fire Marshal Aid Believes Fred Foster Link in Confession.

Fred Foster, ex-convict, is being sought today by the state fire marshal's office as an important link in the chain of evidence by which George Coogan, field chief of the arson division, hopes to convict two prominent Washington (Ind.) citizens of first-degree arson.

According to a confession made to Coogan by Joe Groves, Vincennes, Foster aided Groves in firing a house belonging to Evert Beck, Washington insurance man. The confession alleges that they were hired for the job by Harry Billings, Washington. Both Evert and Billings are under $2,500 bond.

Confession also was obtained from Oral Carnahan, Vincennes, alleging Billings hired Groves and himself to fire a house belonging to Billings at Washington. Both Groves and Carnahan are ex-convicts and now are serving arson sentences at the Indiana state reformatory. Foster served a sentence for robbery at the Illinois state prison at Joliet, Ill.

BODY EXHUMED FOR INQUIRY OF SECRET NATURE

Purpose of Analysis After Fowler Man's Death Not Disclosed.

By Times Special
FOWLER, Ind., Oct. 20.—Benton county authorities are keeping an unbroken silence regarding an investigation which was disclosed when the body of Gust F. Pratt, who was a wealthy land owner, was exhumed from the Fowler cemetery and the vital organs removed and sent to an Indianapolis laboratory for analysis.

Coroner H. A. Conley of Benton county, said to have been in charge of the exhumation, refuses to deny or confirm the report that it took place. Prosecutor Robert D. Smally declared he knew nothing about it until informed by newspaper men.

It is said the organs desired for analysis were removed by Dr. A. P. Rainier of Remington, with the assistance of a pathologist.

Mr. Pratt died June 19, at a sanitarium in Martinsville, ten days after being removed to it from his home here. He had been in ill health several months, his condition being attributed to hardening of the arteries. He was 76 years old.

At the time of his death, the aged man was the owner of a considerable quantity of land in Benton county as well as property here. He was bequeathed to Min
