

FINANCE CZAR OF TENNESSEE LOSES THRONE

Results of 14 Years of Meteoric Rise Erased in Caldwell Debate.

By United Press
NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 19.—Rogers Caldwell fought his way to power in the financial, political and sports fields of the old south in the relatively brief span of fourteen years, and saw all his leadership taken from him in less than two months.

The collapse of Caldwell & Co., his investment banking house, had repercussions extending even into states where its influence was conceived to be remote.

Caldwell was only 27, not long out of Vanderbilt university, when he organized Caldwell & Co., one year before the United States entered the World war. The original capitalization was $100,000.

In the succeeding fourteen years, it expanded to a capitalization of $2,000,000, with resources in excess of $5,000,000, becoming the outstanding stock organization in the south, with more than a dozen branches and interests in an amazing variety of large enterprises.

Selling His Race Stable

Prospering, Caldwell turned his attention to politics, sports and society.

He successfully conducted the recent Tennessee Democratic campaign.

His colors were worn by more than sixty thoroughbred race horses. He and Mrs. Caldwell entertained at a palatial home, Brentwood house, on a 300-acre estate.

But business depression affected his resources, so that now he is selling his stable at auction, Dec. 2, renouncing the world of finance to become a farmer, and warning the country that "we must get back to fundamentals."

In mid-September a state bank examination of the Bank of Tennessee, Caldwell subsidiary, required deposit of $3,840,000 in securities to cover liabilities. "The attorney-general of Tennessee now announces the entire $3,840,000 is missing."

Run Started on Banks

Something over a month later, Caldwell & Co. itself reached such a state that a committee of Nashville bankers was appointed with approval of Eugene R. Black, governor of the sixth federal reserve bank, Atlanta, to administer its affairs.

The following week the Bank of Tennessee went into liquidation, with $13,969,500.50 in assets, "book assets," $13,969,500.50 in liabilities, the same cash on hand had been listed in mid-September at $1,000,000.

A few days later the Holston-Union National bank of Knoxville, in which Caldwell owned a minority interest, closed after "heavy withdrawals." Its last statement showed deposits of $12,579,123 and resources of $16,300,000.

Simultaneously, a considerable run started on the Liberty Bank and Trust Company of Nashville, which closed two days later to liquidate. The Liberty bank was relatively small, listing assets of $1,000,000, paid in capital of $100,000.

Handles Many Millions

A federal receivership for Caldwell & Co. was ordered by John J. Gore, two co-receivers, Lee Douglas and Rutledge Smith, were appointed under bond of $500,000 each, and ordered to file an inventory.

Bank closings occurred after the Caldwell crash in the nearby states of Kentucky and Arkansas. Public officials in Arkansas announced the developments were due primarily to "hysteria," while in Kentucky rumors of Caldwell control were denied by bank officials.

It is estimated that in the fourteen years before it went into receivership, Caldwell & Co. handled between $300,000,000 and $500,000,000 in southern stocks and bonds.

BLAME IT ON RICH!

Poor Are Dry, Says Mrs. Colvin

By United Press
HOUSTON, Nov. 19.—Wealthy persons furnish most of the obstacles to prohibition enforcement, Mrs. R. Leigh Colvin, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of New York City, here for the national W. C. T. U. convention, believes.

Poor people, she said, are an interview today, are much better prohibitionists than the rich.

"All this so-called sentiment against prohibition is propaganda, for the most part," Mrs. Colvin said.

Wealthy enemies of prohibition are financing it. About seven millionaires are contributing more than half the money being used to finance anti-prohibition work.

3-YEAR TERMS GIVEN 'LEGGERS'

Speakeasy Operator May Be Deported.

Three years each in Leavenworth penitentiary was the sentence imposed today by Federal Judge Robert C. Baltzell on Chris Schischoff and Chris Vilaschoff, proprietors of a speakeasy at 843 East Washington street.

On Vilaschoff's admission he never has been naturalized after twenty-three years in the United States, Judge Baltzell recommended his case be turned over to immigration authorities with a view toward deportation.

The court also suggested Schischoff's status as a citizen be investigated. Both men are natives of Macedonia.

They were convicted by a jury last week on charges of liquor sales, nuisance, and conspiracy to violate liquor laws, in connection with trial of ten police on conspiracy charges. All the policemen were acquitted, or freed by the judge, before the case went to the jury.

The following week the Bank of Tennessee went into liquidation, with $13,969,500.50 in assets, "book assets," $13,969,500.50 in liabilities, the same cash on hand had been listed in mid-September at $1,000,000.

ENDS LIFE PLEADING THAT VALUED VIOLINS BE SAVED

A SMALL phial, emptied, of a rare, deadly drug used in making of violins, a card with a cryptic half-sentence, and a short note today shaped themselves in the final chapter of the life of Henry M. Skinner, 50, 1315 North Rural street.

In his workshop at 214 Marion building, Ohio and Meridian streets, Tuesday night, Skinner drank the poisonous drug, lay down on a cot beside his work bench, and died.

Neither the note nor his family could give authorities a clue to the motive for suicide.

On a card on the table was scribbled:

"To the end . . ."

After proposing the return of beer, Glenn added:

"This, in my judgment, would satisfy 90 per cent of those who are opposed to the present liquor situation and would replace present widespread use of injurious brews and high-powered liquors and spirits and also take away the revenue now flowing from illicit liquor traffic into the hands of gangsters, and tend for law and order."

PREPARES BILL PROVIDING FREE SCHOOL BOOKS

Galloway Measure Would Make Law Effective in Fall of 1931.

First free text book bill actually drafted for introduction in the state legislature, convening in January, was in the hands of Representative-elect Fred S. Galloway (Dem., Indianapolis) today.

"I'll introduce it the first chance I have," said Galloway, who made free text books one of his campaign pledges.

Galloway's bill, drafted with the aid of Dr. Charles Kettelborough of the legislative reference bureau, would require township advisory boards, school trustees or school boards to levy a tax sufficient to purchase all text books used in public common schools. The levy first would be made in 1931.

Deposits to Be Made

The same officials shall prescribe rules for the protection, care, custody and return of the text books and may require pupils to deposit full price of the books to insure their return in good condition.

Township trustees or school boards would certify to the county superintendent and he to the state superintendent of public instruction the number of books required, these in all cases to be the books selected by the school book board as now provided by law.

Purchase Not Barred

Payment would be made by the school units to the county superintendent and so on through the state superintendent to the publisher or contractor. Prices would be fixed by the state school book board.

To insure pupils against contagious or infectious diseases by return and exchange of books, school officials would be empowered to use the books used by diseased pupils and to require fumigation of all books periodically.

Pupils desiring to purchase their own books would not be barred from doing so. The free text book distribution would begin next fall under provisions of Galloway's measure.
