PARIS, Jan. 5.—The body of Marshal Joseph Joffre lay in state on a simple military camp cot at the chapel of Saint Louis today, while thousands of Frenchmen, many of them weeping, filed reverently past the bier.

Joffre's head rested on a white cushion. His face, hollowed and worn by suffering, hardly was recognizable. A blue tunic covered his legs, hiding the amputation above his left knee, which was kept secret at the marshal's wish for eight days, while he fought against the poison of gangrene.

Many of his countrymen had waited outside the chapel since daylight to pay homage to the great soldier of France. In the marshal's crossed hands rested a silver crucifix. A military medal was the only decoration on the famous black tunic he wore at the battle of the Marne, when he gained the nation's acclaim and love as the hero of a decisive battle.

Chapel Draped in Black
Joffre's flag, which was carried behind him by a flag bearer throughout the World war, was placed at his head. At the foot of his simple cot, on nineteen black silk cushions, glittered the forty military decorations given him by the nations of the world.

Also at the foot of the cot, on a separate cushion, lay the marshal's baton. The chapel walls were draped in black and bore the battle-torn flags of regiments which were wiped out in the World war, or disbanded after the armistice.

French war veterans, many of them blind, legless, or crippled, awaited their turn to enter the chapel. Some had seen Joffre in action when he won the titles given him by the people of France, the savior of Paris and the hero of the Marne.

Eight trench guns encircled the old soldier as he lay in death.

Giant Candles Lighted
The light of four giant candles, held in immense golden candelabrae flickered over his shrunken form like the rays of a soldier's camp fire.

Joffre's body arrived at the chapel of Saint Louis at 7:15 a. m., transferred from the hospital of Saint Jean de Dieu by automobile. General Henri Gouraud, military governor of Paris, and officers of Joffre's staff accompanied the body on the short journey through the streets of Paris.

The marshal's officers placed the body on the bier and lighted four giant candles at the corners of his bed. Four officers of the Polytechnic school mounted guard, and the first of thousands of Joffre's countrymen to pay their homage to the great soldier were admitted to the chapel. American decorations given Joffre included the distinguished service medal, combatant's cross, commemorative medal, and the American Legion medal.

Ambassador to Attend
The United States will be represented at the funeral Wednesday at Notre Dame cathedral by Ambassador Walter E. Edge and the entire staff of the American embassy. Britain will send fifty of its majesty's guards and a band of twenty-two pieces from the royal air force. Lord Tyrrell, British ambassador, will represent King George.

Representation from Germany, turned back by Joffre when her imperial armies threatened the gates of Paris, had not been announced. The German ambassador, Dr. Leopold von Hoesch, however, called at the hospital to extend condolences to Madame Joffre the day after the marshal died.

Joffre's widow and his daughter kept vigil beside his deathbed Sunday night.

Army Boat Founders After Collision With Liner.

By United Press

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The fifty-eight members of the crew of the United States army dredge Raritan were rescued today when the vessel went down off Ft. Wadsworth after a collision with the coastwise liner City of Montgomery, inbound from Savannah.

Only four of the men, awakened by an officer who saw a crash, was inevitable, were picked up by the government mail boat President, anchored off the fort awaiting incoming liners, and the other four were taken aboard by a police boat. Capt. John Peterson of the barge was treated for bruises.

Witnesses reported an explosion took place aboard the Raritan after the collision. Samuel S. Watts, third officer of the Raritan told of the accident. "We were going down the bay," Watts said, "and had passed one ship when the City of Montgomery appeared out of the haze ahead. I blew one whistle but got no reversal. I signaled for the reversal of our engines and blew the whistle again but the City of Montgomery ignored my signals and came right at us. Before we were struck, I had ordered the awakening of the members of the crew. The dredge began sinking at once and went down in about twenty minutes."

The City of Montgomery, under Captain B. H. Garfield, carried thirty-six passengers.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 5.—Long hours and strenuous work have taken their toll in the ranks of the much-abused motion picture people whose life, they will tell you, is no bed of roses.

Many fine actors and actresses have been the victims of overwork in Hollywood's biggest industry, including the much mourned Barbara LaMarr and Wallace Reid.

But death does not claim them all—sickness sometimes lays them low for months upon end.

The latest victims are Renee Adoree and Lila Lee. Adoree is confined to a sanitarium in Arizona, fighting a winning battle against tuberculosis.

Lila is living in comparative ease and luxury, occupying a small bungalow with her maid. But she is not happy in her new surroundings—she misses her friends.

Lila Lee was taken to the stage at an early age by Gus Edwards.

Anne Carlisle

Funeral Tuesday

at South Bend

By Times Special

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Jan. 5.—Funeral services will be held here Tuesday for Mrs. Anne Studebaker Carlisle, widely known South Bend woman, who died suddenly at her home Saturday night of a blood clot in her heart. She was the wife of Charles S. Carlisle.

Mrs. Carlisle was active in civic, political, club and philanthropic affairs. She was a daughter of the late Clement Studebaker, one of the founders of the Studebaker Carriage Company, which later developed into the Studebaker Corporation of America.

Active as Republican

She was a Republican and active for many years in Republican women's affairs in the state. She was one of the first women delegates to a Republican national convention, being selected a delegate-at-large to the 1924 convention at Cleveland which nominated Calvin Coolidge for President.

The League of Women Voters was another political organization which claimed much of her attention and she served as its state president. At the time of her death she was state chairman of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and active in Schuyler Colfax chapter in South Bend.

Served During War

One of her notable public services was during the World war when she was selected by Governor James P. Goodrich as the woman member of the state council of defense and as chairman of the woman's council of all war activities in the state. Under her leadership each of the ninety-two counties in the state was organized.

In recent years she served on several historical commissions, among them both the state and national George Rogers Clark Memorial commissions, the Nancy Hanks Lincoln and Indiana World war memorial commissions.

The Rev. James L. Ardner of Chicago will conduct the funeral services. He will be assisted by the Rev. Paul Benedict of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church, in which, as the daughter of a founder, she was interested for many years.

SHE still was known as Cud-dies Edwards when she entered the films, later to marry James Kirkwood.

Miss Adoree is having a much more lonesome time of it than is Lila. She takes her year of enforced idleness "on the chin," spending all her hours in an ordinary hospital bed on an screened-in sleeping porch which she shares with six other patients.

Even her favorite dog, Sapeeto, the blue-black Chow, has been sent away while she regains her health.

Another recent victim was Anna Q. Nilsson, who has just left the hospital after spending fifteen months in a plaster cast. Her hip was fractured in a fall from a horse while making a picture two years ago.

Anna Q. has gone home to Sweden to see her family for the first time in many years, but she'll be back next spring to take up her work where she left off.

ASK GOVERNORS

Industry in Crisis, Say Kansas, Oklahoma Chiefs.

By United Press

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 5.—An emergency meeting of the Governors of Louisiana, Arkansas, Colorado, California, Wyoming, New Mexico, Texas and Montana to send delegates to the conference were sent Sunday night by Reed and Holloway after an all-day conference with Wirt Franklin, president of the Independent Petroleum Producers Association of America.

"On account of the dire distress in the petroleum industry, with particular reference to saving 300,000 small wells which have a settled production of 500,000 barrels daily, from certain abandonment, we have decided to call this conference," the two Governors said.

The action was a result of the plunging of thousands of stripper wells in Oklahoma and Kansas. The wells were plugged after the Prairie Oil and Gas Company withdrew on Jan. 1 as purchaser of their products.

TIME-LOCKED VAULT OPENS; ROBBERY BARED

Cashier Is Held as New

Developments Are Probed

by U. S. Officials.

By United Press

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—A close friendship between Mary V. Curran, 25, telephone operator of the closed Lawrence Avenue National bank and John E. Malloy, married assistant cashier, was revealed today while angry depositors surrounded the institution demanding their funds.

Malloy, accused of embezzling $10,000, despite his insistence that four bandits robbed the bank, was Miss Curran's superior in the bank, but became "good friend" after hours and took her on night club tours, she told Detective Chief John Norton.

"We met when I started working at the bank two and one-half years ago," she said. "He had been there six months then. Our night club visits were not improper, even if he is married and has two children. My brother went along with us."

Girl Appears Voluntarily

Miss Curran appeared voluntarily and told her story to police and federal agents investigating Malloy's statements.

The crowd surrounding the bank was orderly, although some of the men waved their arms and talked of "prosecution," as they peered through the windows. The bank's doors were closed for an audit of its losses.

As Malloy had predicted, the bank's vault opened Sunday morning, revealing that the vault had been looted of $10,000 in cash, and that safe deposit boxes had been ripped open. Jewelry cases and non-negotiable securities from boxes were scattered on the floor.

Loans Are Investigated

The bank's loss determined, federal examinations called for lists of valuable kept in the safe deposit boxes, having no other way except elimination to determine what else was missing.

The police investigation of Malloy's robbery story disclosed today that the official net $3,000 to a saloon keeper in November after the borrower was involved in a murder mystery.

Added to that was the declaration to the state's attorneys office that a depositor, Malloy, had $3,000 to a race track betting commission a month later.

President Almost Faints

The vault opening, police said, substantiated the story May told Milwaukee police Thursday night—that four men, posing as bank examiners, had called him up, looted the vault, forced him to lock the doors and then taken him for a four-hour automobile ride and set him free near the Wisconsin city.

Among the few allowed to peer into the vault after the doors were opened was George Pilot, president of the bank. The sight of the deposit boxes ripped open and the contents scattered about the floor caused him almost to faint. A few minutes later he announced in an unsteady voice merely that "the vault has been entered and robbed."

One of the most mysterious angles was in the fact that the robbery contents scattered about the floor caused him almost to faint. A few minutes later he announced in an unsteady voice merely that "the vault has been entered and robbed."

HAMPTON ROADS, Va., Jan. 5.—Lack of funds with which to purchase a new sextant today held up the projected New York-to-Paris flight of Mrs. Beryl Hart and William S. MacLaren.

The fliers, who landed here Saturday night after a damaged sextant, darkness and diminishing fuel supply forced them back to the mainland when they were within an hour's flying distance from Bermuda, announced Sunday night they had obtained the necessary navigation instrument from the naval academy at Annapolis and that they would take off this morning.

Later, however, they learned that while sextant was available for their use they would have to pay for it first.

When hurried efforts to obtain the needed amount failed they postponed the resumption of the flight to Bermuda, first stop on the air project.
