—WHAT'S IN FASHION?—

More Gloves—Longer Ones

Directed By AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, March 5. — That glove box of yours is going to be fuller this spring than for a long time—if you follow the fashion in dresses, coats and suits.

Because there are several different sleeve lengths—all in fashion—and each sleeve length requires a different length glove.

There was a time, a few years ago, when short little gloves were worn with short little sleeves. But not today. The shorter the sleeve, the longer the glove, is the fashion idea.

And that makes five lengths of gloves fashionable for daytime—worn with four different length sleeves.

With Long Sleeves

The shortest—and the one everybody's most used to—is the four-button length.

It's worn with coats and suits that have full-length regular width sleeves and with some dresses with long, close-fitting sleeves.

The six-button glove is worn with these same costumes by fashion-knowing women who like their gloves to wrinkle in a smartly careless sort of way. You can see the effect in the sketch.

The six-button glove can be worn with the new three-quarter coat, suit or dress sleeve. But better looking with this length sleeve is the glove that's two buttons longer—the eight button.

It comes up higher and can be wrinkled more.

Longer Gloves Wrinkle

Some women will wear this eight-button glove with sleeves that stop just above the elbow. But again, the longer, twelve-button glove gives you those few wrinkles that make the difference between smart-wearing and just wearing.

The eight-button glove has to be pulled straight to reach as far as it ought to reach with this above-the-elbow sleeve.

When still shorter sleeves—cap length—go out on the street without a coat, you're a choice of twelve or sixteen-button gloves—depending on whether or not you want to cover the elbow.

And a good way to decide this is to try on both kinds before a mirror and see which looks better to you.

Neutral Shades Convenient

Most of your new spring gloves you'll probably want in neutral shades of beige that look well with navy, black, beige, brown and print costumes.

But if your costume has white accents—like a white fur scarf, with a navy coat or suit—white gloves are a smart note.

Dark brown gloves worn with a beige or other very light costume are a new idea . . . and a good-looking one, especially if the shoes or hat are in same dark brown.

A pair in natural chambray color fits in, too, since color contrast is so important in the spring costume. It's especially nice with navy, but good with others as well.

And if you're wearing navy shoes with a navy costume, it's quite possible you'll want a pair of navy gloves to go with them. It would make you very much in fashion.

Style Review Stresses Use of Lace in Latest Fashions

"This year of lace" was stressed before a fashionable Indianapolis audience who gathered in Ayres' auditorium Wednesday afternoon. Lace was revealed as one of the most important fabrics for evening gowns and dancing pajamas.

One interesting gown of white lace was worn with red jewelry and red shoes. This use of decided color contrast was one of the outstanding features of the showing. Unusual combinations such as gray and brown, were used with great effectiveness.

Mrs. John Fishback, Ayres' fashion director, said, "This year we recognize the importance of scarves and jackets from the bolero type to the seven-eighths length. Jewelry lends noble aid in introducing color into our costumes. Chalk jewelry is important. Any ensemble is smarter for a touch of white. Patent leather is used in bags, belts, shoes and mesh hose, for all times of the day."

"Sleeves are shorter, and spring smartness demands that one wear gloves, a size larger than one wore last year."

"A year ago, foreheads emerged from hats. Now hair comes out and must be neatly tended. We choose a bicorne, tricorn, or a halo hat. We see the return of the sailor, with brims setting forth on their gay and jaunty debut."

There is a decided vogue for straw, she said.

"Mrs. Fishback, in conclusion, cautioned her audience to 'be yourself,' individuality is the keynote of the mode."

Just Every Day Sense

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

"I HAVE spent all the best years of my life working for my children," writes "Unhappy Mother," "yet they seem to have very little gratitude for all I have done for them. What must I do to awaken their sense of duty?" she asks.

Well, the first thing to do, it seems to me, would be to cease thinking about what hardships had been endured. Then I never again should talk to my children about how grateful they must be.

Now matter how self-sacrificing a parent has been, she is lost once she begins to rebuke her family for ingratitude. Children are just "folks" like the rest of us and we all resent being prodded about our duty.

This is just about the quickest way for any mother to build up callousness in the hearts of sons and daughters—this constant harping about gratitude they owe her.

EVIDENTLY this woman belongs to the old regime. The very tone of her letter breathes martyrdom. One must pity her, of course. Doubtless she has done the best she could.

It is a great mistake, however, for a mother to do too much for her children. And it is a greater mistake, after she has done it, to be reminding them of her labors. A martyr in the house is pretty sure to drive everybody else out of it.

While it does not always follow, the general rule is that any mother who has, as she puts it, "worked her fingers to the bone," for her children, develops this unpleasant martyr complex. She goes about feeling sorry for how ungrateful the family is.

The pity of it all is that she really would die for them. Only when she was doing it she would be visualizing the heroism of her behavior.

All women should pray God for common sense. This quality is highly necessary in management of husbands and bringing up of children. And common sense tells us that even a mother must have lovable traits to get love, even the love of her children.
