Bare Feet for Evening, Paris Edict

BY MINOTT SAUNDERS

NEA Service Writer

PARIS, March 9.—A woman will have to be very careful to put her best foot forward at evening functions if the style edict of the fashion world is adopted.

It is a disturbing dictum for bare feet, clad only in high-heeled sandals.

The suggested mode created something of a sensation at the formal spring opening, and when it was over the surprised guests retired to the buffet and over their champagne tried to talk learnedly over the new touch of untethered toes.

Adds a Kick

The fashion certainly put a kick in the collection and male eyes were surprisingly cast down as the pretty mannequins paraded in their flimsy, flowing evening gowns.

Backs were cut to the waist, some of the skirts were slashed to the knees and others were diaphanous to a dizzy height, but the toes hid it.

The toenails were painted a vivid red to match the dainty fingertips of the mannequins and on some of the heels there was a suggestion of rouge, after the fashion of the Nautch dancing girls.

Feet Spread Out

At once the study of the style became very intriguing. It was commented upon that there was more in a woman's dainty afternoon shoe than appeared when the daytime clothes were shown.

The feet of the same mannequins spread out astonishingly when seen in their normal state.

Toes pointed in various directions and moved bewitchingly under the peculiar kind of gait considered proper for such circumstances.

It probably was impolite on the part of some of the spectators, but human nature was too weak to let such an opportunity to study the toe troubles of others.

Patches on Toes

One mannequin apparently was too proud to go barefoot, or else she had had an accident. With her evening sandals she wore light stockings, flesh-colored, but underneath could be detected a couple of patches on the toes.

Another most certainly had had an accident, such as might befall any woman who steps out. Her left big-toe nail was black and she didn't seem to like her job too well that night.

She explained that she had hit her toe against something and the nail had become discolored. And the toes of several of the other girls showed the unmistakable toll taken on tender skin by tight shoes.

The new fashion was received with considerable reserve. Obviously it was not easy to get accustomed to the sight of bare feet in the natural beauty of the formal setting and associated with gowns of rich texture and color.

It was agreed that the Brothers Worth, grandsons of the great old pioneer in the art of Haute Couture, had dared greatly.

Women were heard to ask each other in whispers if their feet were fit to "face" such a mode.

One thing is certain: If women of fashion consent to toe the line as laid down by this house of high reputation, it will mean prosperity for pedicures.

Grand Duchess Seems Modern Business Woman in Talk

A very modern business woman in a very matter of fact manner told the story of her life as the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia during the regime of Emperor Alexander III, at Caleb Mills hall Saturday night.

In excellent English, although her accent was pronounced, she discussed her old world background as a preparation for modern life.

Her story concerned the lives of the two grandchildren of Alexander, Marie, and her brother Dmitri, as a part of the Russian court.

She spoke of vague forewarnings of the revolution; of the blindness and the helplessness of the Russian rulers; of the assassination of her uncle, the Grand Duke Serge, before the very eyes of her aunt; of the advent of the World war and of her work as a Red Cross nurse at the front.

With barely perceptible emotion, the grand duchess depicted the outbreak of the revolution, the terror inspired by the Bolsheviks, the murder of seventeen members of her family; her father's imprisonment and her own escape to Rumania and subsequent arrival in Paris.

She organized and directed an embroidery factory in Paris after being a designer for Patou, Chanel and other French dress houses, then she said ruefully, "Embroidery went out of fashion."

"Up to the days following the revolution," she said, "my brother and I were actors on a stage, wearing grand clothes. We had to step down and learn to live as other people."

Her life at the court she pictured as being very simple, with magnificence, pomp and splendor one imagines as being a part of the daily life reserved for ceremonial occasions.

"I feel more at home in your country than in any since I have left my home," she concluded. "My reception everywhere has been kind, and I sincerely love your country and your people. And," she said, "it may interest you to know that my brother married a girl from Ohio."

The grand duchess was presented by the Tudor Hall Alumnae Association. She was introduced by Henry Hornbrook.

To End a Cough In a Hurry, Mix This at Home

To end a stubborn cough quickly, it is important to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes, get rid of the germs and also to aid the system inwardly to help throw off the trouble.

For these purposes, here is a home-made medicine, far better than anything you could buy at 3 times the cost. From any drugstore, get 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to fill up the pint. This takes but a moment, and makes a remedy so effective that you will never do without, once you have used it. Keeps perfectly, and children like it.

This simple remedy does three necessary things. First, it loosens the germ-laden phlegm. Second, it soothes away the inflammation. Third, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. This explains why it brings such quick relief, even in the obstinate bronchial coughs which follow cold epidemics.
