

TRADE FRICTION LEADS STIMSON TO RUSS PROBE

Three-Fold Inquiry Will Be Made of Soviet by U. S. State Department.

By United Press
WASHINGTON, March 10.—Recent Soviet-American trade friction and its repercussions in congress were understood today to have influenced State Secretary Henry L. Stimson to order a scientific study of Russia.

The inquiry, it appeared today, will be threefold. Allen T. Klots, Stimson's personal assistant, already is poring over reports on the Soviet state.

The state department's far eastern division probably will make another study for the secretary.

James Grafton Rogers of Denver, recently appointed assistant secretary, may make still another.

Meanwhile, Stimson's associates are firm in their assertion that no change in American recognition policy is foreseen by the study.

Economics stand in the foreground of the Russia problem. Commerce department figures showed American exports to the Soviet state to rise from $81,548,000 in 1929 to $111,362,000 in 1930.

British exports during the same period rose even more sharply.

In South America, Britain is driving to recoup its markets and vanquish American competition. The empire's master salesman, the prince of Wales, now is on a trade-boosting tour of the southern continent. In the far east, United States trade is menaced by rising tariff barriers and dwindling silver values.

Meanwhile Russia, promising an ever-increasing market, is disgruntled by the treasury's ban on pulp wood shipped here and by the threat of an embargo on other commodities.

What the inquiry will lead to can not be predicted now. It is known, however, that the state department is anxious to lubricate American-Russian trade machinery.

A temporary expedient to this end has been found in Turkish willingness to have its representatives in Russia perform notarial services for American business men. But this is regarded only as a make-shift.

Regarding recognition, informed officials say President Hoover still is opposed to such a step.

COUGHED, GREW WEAK, THIN, PALE

When I was about 21 years of age I caught a cold that settled in my bronchials and so weakened them that it developed into a chronic cough which bothered me both day and night. I grew very weak, thin and pale. I was so rundown in health that I began to think I was not going to recover from this trouble. Upon the advice of my father I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The first bottle made a marked improvement in my condition, and when I had finished my second I was entirely relieved of my weak bronchials and cough, and since then whenever I catch a cold I take a bottle of the "Disease" and my cold disappears." —J.
