He-Men!

Rockne's Aim as Coach Was to Build Character, Culture and Courage in His Players.

Following is the third of a series of stories on the life of Knute Rockne.

By GEORGE KIRKSEY
United Press Staff Correspondent

KNUTE ROCKNE'S aim as a football coach was to turn out "men of culture, character and courage."

In building great football teams, he did not overlook the more important business of equipping young men for the problems of life.

"Football teaches a boy responsibility," Rockne once said. "Responsibility as a representative of his college; responsibility to his teammates and responsibility in controlling his passions, fear, hatred, jealousy and rashness. Football brings out the best there is in one."

Rockne possessed dislike bordering almost on hate for "lounge-lizards," "drug-store boys," "mean-spirited high schoolers," he termed boys of the "sissy" type.

ONE of Rockne's classics was his satire on the tendency toward social life in colleges as opposed to athletics. It was the description of a football game in 1935 between Notre Dame and Northwestern. Some of the lines from the speech follow:

"The Notre Dame team presented a striking appearance with their green shirts and their headgear resembling a woodsman's toque. Giving a neat appearance without being at all gaudy was the fact that their hip-pads were trimmed with georgette. Hanging about their necks were pendants of the lavalliere type.

"Kicking off for Notre Dame was T. Fitzpatrick Murphy, better known as 'Two Lumps,' as he always took two lumps of sugar in his orange Pekoe tea.

"As a result of the clever defensive tagging of the two teams, neither team gained an advantage in the first half. Between halves the teams had tea.

"Up until five minutes of the end of the fourth period it looked like a tie game. Suddenly out of a rhythmic gavotte, and a hidden ball evolution, old M. Bickerdash Pix III of the famous North Shore family went streaking toward Notre Dame's goal.

The Northwestern stands were mad with pandemonium, and it looked like sure defeat for Notre Dame.

"But they failed to reckon with the resourcefulness of old Two Lumps. Did Two Lumps get panicky when he saw Bickerdash flying toward the goal? Not old Two Lumps. With a savoraire faire, for which he was justly famous, he cupped his hands and said:

"I say, Bickerdash, old thing, there's a terrible run in your stocking."

"Imagine the intense embarrassment and mortification of old Bickerdash. What could he do but drop the ball and run for the clubhouse, and the game was saved."

ROCKNE liked boys with ideals, boys with courage, boys who had character. He liked to see his players wear corduroy pants and sweaters.

"To raccoon coats on the campus," was one of his mottoes. "We want a school of masculine democracy."

The three most important requisites Rockne demanded from his players were brains, speed and courage. As for physical qualities he liked players with big hands.

Rockne's football teams were true expressions of the man himself. Football was Rockne's life, his love, his all. No artist ever put more of his soul on canvas.

No musician ever put more feeling into a symphony than Rockne did into that strange conglomerate of humanity—boys of all racial strains—which he welded into super-football teams.

THERE has been much said about the "Rockne system."

Most of this is a fallacy. The Rockne system was Rockne himself. Rockne's teams stressed speed above everything else. The basis of his offensive was the Napoleonic axiom: "Get to the point of attack first."

Rockne relied on the shift play to accomplish this. His teams perfected the shift to such an extent that the rules had to be changed.

But Rockne had no set formula for developing football teams. He built his plays and his teams around his players. He proved that with his "Four Horsemen"—Harry Stuhldreher, quarterback; Don Miller and Elmer Crowley, half backs, and Jimmy Layden, full back. None of them had shown any special promise in football until they came under Rockne's guidance in 1922.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., April 3.—Another day of mourning for their beloved Knute Rockne today tested the indomitable courage of men of Notre Dame.

Rather than prolong the period of the late coach was moved early today from the downtown chapel to Rockne's red brick home, where it will lie in state until the funeral services are held Saturday.

Another day of mourning for their beloved Knute Rockne today tested the indomitable courage of men of Notre Dame. Rather than prolong the period of the late coach was moved early today from the downtown chapel to Rockne's red brick home, where it will lie in state until the funeral services are held Saturday.

Holy week will prevent solemn requiem high mass being held at the ceremony and that it will be deferred until next Thursday when the students of Notre Dame return from the Easter holidays.

Public Not to Be Admitted. Burial will take place in Highland cemetery, a new plot about two miles from South Bend on the Portage road.

The public will not be admitted to the services because of the limited seating capacity of the little chapel where Rockne was baptized in the Catholic faith the day of the Notre Dame-Northwestern football game six years ago. In that game Notre Dame was beaten badly at half-time, 10-0, but triumphed 13-10, by a blazing second half rally.

Only past and present Notre Dame athletes, officials of the university, Rockne's intimate friends and members of the family will attend the simple services. The sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Charles L. O'Donnell, president of Notre Dame.

He will be assisted by the Rev. Father Michael Mulcaire, vice-president and chairman of the board of athletic control, and the Rev. Father Raymond Murch.

Pallbearers Are Chosen. Six of the stars of Rockne's 1930 championship team were chosen to serve as pallbearers. The six players selected by Mrs. Rockne and the coaching staff were Tom Conley of Philadelphia, 1930 captain; Captain-Elect Tommy Yarr of Chinatown, Wash.; Marchmont Schwartz of Bay St. Louis, Miss.; Frank Carideo, all-America quarterback back; Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Martin Brill of Philadelphia and Lawrence Mullins of Los Angeles.

From all parts of the nation men came to pay their last respects to the great coach who met death in an airplane accident in Kansas last Tuesday.

Among the more prominent persons either here or on their way were Jimmy Phelan, University of Washington coach and captain of the 1917 team; Chick Meahan, New York university coach; Dr. R. N. Elphinstone, business manager of athletics; Southern Methodist university; Adam Walsh, Yale line coach; Vic Hansen, Syracuse coach; Ed Thorpe, New York, who officiated many Notre Dame games; Charles Dorais, Detroit coach and teammate of Rockne, and all of the "four horsemen."

BANDITS TOSS ALL-NIGHT PARTY AT CASHIER'S HOME; ROB BANK

By United Press
MUNDELEIN, Ill., April 3.—

Four young bandits took charge of the home of M. C. Mott, cashier of the Mundelein State bank, Thursday night, held the family of five prisoners until this morning, forced Mott to accompany them to the bank, robbed it of $10,000 and escaped.

The bandits made themselves at home all night in the two-story Mott residence. They turned the lights low, listened to the broadcast of the "Golden Gloves" boxing tournament, cooked bacon and eggs and drank considerable of the liquor they had brought along for the party.

Two of the bandits appeared at the Mott home at 8:30 Thursday night. They were received by Neil, 19, and said they wanted "to talk business" with his father. When Mott appeared, they produced pistols and herded Mott, his wife Grace and William, 14, into the living room.

"Just keep quiet and everything will be all right," one of the bandits said. He called two other bandits from outside. They carried bundles.

"Machine guns," one of the bandits said as the bundles were laid on the floor,

(Copyright, 1931, by United Press)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, April 3.—American women and children who had come safely through the horror of the destruction of Managua by earthquake and fire were evacuated to Corinto by airplane today.

The group totaling about 600 was taken aboard the transport Chautamont at Corinto. It was understood some would be sent to the Canal Zone and others transported direct to their homes in the United States.

Farewells were said as the wives and children parted from their husbands, left behind to carry on the work of rehabilitation in the ruined city.

Children were hustled into airplanes with their mothers and soon headed away leaving a shambles that once was a prosperous city.

Fathers went back to work seeking boddies, destroying ruins that threatened to topple down, checking casualties and attempting to repair the water supply system.

Some of the fathers, those of the marine corps numbered among their duties the shooting of looters. Several were shot during the night.

Detectives who questioned Mrs. Marie Cole and obtained her alleged confession to participation in the murder of her husband, Raymond Cole, were bantered by her replies to questions with, "You're great D. T.s."

This testimony was given today by Warren P. Allender, federal dry agent, at the trial of Mrs. Cole on a charge of being the accessory to the murder of her husband by her sweetheart, Frank Jordan.

The testimony came near the close of the state's case against the woman. The defense was expected to begin presentation of its case late today or early Saturday.

Allender said the "kidded" detectives after they asked what she threw out of the car at the scene of the alleged crime near Greenfield.

HALT GAMING, CITY COPS TO BE ORDERED

Police Heads Scheduled to Get 'Jacking Up' at Board Session.

CHIEF KINNEY IS SILENT

Sullivan, Dailey Reported Ready to Deliver Ultimatum.

Officers of the Indianapolis police and detective departments were summoned to a meeting this afternoon in the office of Mayor Reginald H. Sullivan where they were to be admonished to "halt gambling" in the city, it was revealed today.

First word of the secret meeting leaked out at police headquarters when officers admitted they had been ordered to the city hall.

Assertions that the meeting was called to "jacking 'em up" was made to a Times reporter by Charles R. Myers, president of the safety board.

Myers Is Queried

"What is this meeting of police officers for?" Myers was asked. "Who called it?"

"Police Chief Jerry Kinney called it," Myers stated. "Do you know what it's for?"

"Well, I think Kinney wants to 'jacking 'em up' about the gambling situation," Myers replied.

Kinney told reporters he did not know the purpose of the meeting. It first was reported that only officers, including and above the rank of lieutenant, would be called, but it later was learned sergeants and detective department officers were slated to attend.

According to reports, Sullivan and Chief Kinney, safety board members, probably will deliver the ultimatum to the police officers, Myers and Donald S. Morris, of the board, had been reported to be without knowledge of the purpose of the session.

Captain Ray to Appear

Included among officers to be called, according to reliable information, is Captain Otto Ray, head of the Hoosier bureau, assigned to the city controller's office.

Last fall when several police officers were indicted by the federal grand jury, police squads made the rounds of gambling joints and arrested more than 100 persons. Many of the defendants were released in municipal courts.

At that time police heads stated definitely they would "close up the town," although many city officials claimed this was uncalled for because the city was "quieter than ever before."

A shift in police assignments followed the federal court action and officials said this would continue at various times in order that policemen would not "get too well acquainted" on their beats. However, after the first general shift, no further action was taken.

The doors to the jury room had been unlocked only twice since the jurors retired—once for a meager supper Friday night of coffee and sandwiches and again for breakfast this morning. On Judge Joseph Sabath's orders, the jury continued its debate without stopping to sleep.

The angry words of the divided jurors could be heard through the double doors.

Ubangi Belle Elopés With Circus Wild Man

By United Press
LOS ANGELES, April 3.—The circus wild woman, who hails from Africa and has lips as big as saucers, has eloped with the circus wild man, a colored fellow from Georgia, in a strange triangle case.

The trouble is that the wild woman has a husband, "South Sea Island Joe" by name, a tom-tom player with the Al G. Barnes show. Joe complained to the district attorney's office today, not so much about the loss of his wife, he said, as the $500 she took with her.

He obtained a warrant for the arrest of his wife, Jennie Ubangi, of the African Ubangi tribe, and Galvin Bird, 27, Bird, whose home is in Cartersville, Ga., impersonated a wild man.

Jennie is a dusky belle from the jungles. Kissing her is a man sized job.

Jennie's lips are greatly distended by the insertion of wooden disks, which, in Africa, is on a par with the bright red finger nails of Hollywood.

HUNT BOYS IN DEATH

He died en route to city hospital. Three park board employees, working nearby, discovered Ruthart, lying in the shack, a bullet wound in the head.

MALDEN, Mass., April 3.—An automobile, careening dizzily down a street here today, hit a telephone pole on which was a fire alarm box, sounding an alarm.

After the motorist, apparently somewhat unsteady, had driven away, fire apparatus came noisily to the scene.

Persons who witnessed the crash waited to observe the firemen's reaction to what they supposed was a false alarm.

The firemen, however, began playing water on the nearby factory of the Gould Herb factory, where, it developed, a menacing blaze was raging.

Thanks to the accidental alarm, the fire was controlled with damage of only $5,500.
