Sentence Minimums.

PENDLETON, Ind., May 9.—Sixty-four prisoners who had served the minimum of their terms were released from the Indiana state reformatory by the institution's board of trustees, sitting as a parole board. Fifteen petitions for parole were continued, two men were sent to the colony for feeble-minded, and two paroled for deportation to Mexico.

The board showed its resentment against parole violators when it sentenced Raymond Barnes, South Bend, to an eighteen-year term. Barnes was paroled June 9, 1930, and arrested in South Bend, carrying a concealed weapon. He will serve the maximum of a two to twenty-one-year term for manslaughter.

George Van Hoff, returned as a parole violator, told the board he was in the Ohio penitentiary and had saved many lives. Officials said they would investigate his story and if found to be true he would probably be shown leniency. He was sentenced to the reformatory from Wayne county.

Monkey Business Costs
$7.50—Eggs-actly That

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 9.—One of Earl Redden's monkeys came home to roost Thursday. It's rather early in the year for this to happen, even though Redden says he can cite breaking of all records both for monkeys going away to roost and coming back. Last summer a flock of his guaranteed not-to-swim monkeys broke their contract, swam across a pool surrounding their home and hid themselves to trees in various parts of the city. Redden stood under many trees waving bright yellow bananas. All the monkeys came down but one. This one came down this week after spending the winter in a tree. But it came down often during the winter. In fact, Mrs. Helen Ostrander involved Redden for $7.50 because the monkey came down into a chicken run at her home. Every time it left it took a flock of feathers for its nest and two or three eggs. The monkey quite lost its taste for bananas. Redden paid the $7.50 and gave the prodigal to Robert Earl. Redden explained that once an egg eater, always an egg eater. Times are bad and he can't provide eggs for the monkeys.

COURTHOUSE NOW
SERVING AS BARN

Building Erected in 1842
Was Scene of Three Murder Trials.

LAGRANGE, Ind., May 9.—An eighty-nine-year-old barn which stands on farm east of the Brighton schoolhouse was Lagrange county's first courthouse. The building was constructed in 1842. Andrew Ellison, lawyer of the pioneer days, unwilling to see it dismantled when superseded by a new courthouse, had it torn down and the timbers moved by bobsled to the farm where it was reconstructed as a barn.

It is recalled that the courthouse was the scene of three murder trials. In one, Hiram Springer was convicted of manslaughter in the killing of Jacob Beam during a dance brawl. Springer was sentenced to two years in prison. The supreme court reversed the conviction, but Springer escaped a second trial by enlisting in the Union army for service in Civil war.

In 1870 Stephen Jenks was convicted of the murder of George Mallow and given a life term in prison. However, the supreme court reversed the conviction. In the meantime Jenks became a fugitive and was not captured until seven years later when he was again convicted and given a life sentence. He died in prison. Chauncey Barnes was given a life sentence in 1871 for the slaying of his sweetheart, Addie Dwight, a school teacher.

Former State Highway
Employee Strikes Back at Accusers.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., May 9.—Counsel for Ralph Rogers, former state highway district superintendent on trial in Monroe circuit court here charged with conspiracy to defraud in handling crushed stone bought by the highway department, are centering their attack on four state witnesses, J. Owen Hepley, Charles Dull, William Stephenson and John Asher, all formerly in his employ. The defense contends that the four turned state's evidence in the case to shield themselves, and that a conspiracy existed within the Bloomington Crushed Stone Company's organization. The company sold stone in question to the state highway department. While on the witness stand, Asher testified that he falsified weights of loads of stone handled, declaring this was done under instruction of Rogers and Hepley. He said a load of 500 pounds would be recorded as weighing 1,500.

Hepley admitted under cross-examination that he, Asher, Stephenson and Dull had been working together since Rogers discharged them, to cause him to be indicted.

DECISION DEFERRED IN TEACHING WIVES CASE

Reinstatement to Positions.

ANDERSON, Ind., May 9.—Special Judge Alonzo L. Bales, Winchester, has taken under advisement ruling on a plea in abatement to the suit of Mattie Griffin, Grace Doerman and Mary L. Records, discharged Elwood school teachers, who are demanding reinstatement. They were dismissed as a result of a policy of the Elwood school board against employment of married women.

The motion alleges action of the board is final in such matters and that there is no appeal from such a ruling. Demurring to the plea in abatement, Attorney Oswald Ryan contends acts of the board are subject to judicial review and says the ruling against employment of married women is unreasonable and arbitrary.
