

TYPEWRITER IS INSPECTED BY BROOKS JURY

Use Machine Supposed to Have Written Will Drawn Up in 1930.

Jurors turned stenographers in probate court today and, by the "hunt and punch" method, operated a typewriter that is supposed to have written the last will of Bartholomew D. Brooks, Indianapolis business man.

The jury was called upon to perform this unusual service by attorneys for two charity organizations seeking to kill the 1930 will in favor of another 1922 document, which awarded them $200,000 of Brooks' estate.

One lumber-fingered juror surprised a crowded court room with his stenographic ability and did not stop typing until he had written the entire 1930 will.

Institute Typing Process
Another, less agile with the keys, labored tediously to complete a paragraph on the typewriter belonging to attorney A. F. Zainey, counsel for Robert Hackney, business aid of Brooks, who shared largely in the last will.

The typing process was instituted by plaintiffs to prove the 1930 will is a fraud and was not typed by Brooks, an inexperienced typist, as defense has set out in the case. Contentions of the charity groups, the Indianapolis Home for Aged Women and the Indianapolis chapter, American Red Cross, is that the perfectly typed will dated 1930, could not have been typed by Brooks in Zainey's office.

Contention Borne Out
Irregularly typed and blotted pages which the jurors turned out today bear out this contention, plaintiff attorneys contend.

Friends of Brooks during his last years appeared as witnesses for the defense this morning, all testifying that Brooks was of sound mind when the 1930 will was executed. Attorneys for the charity groups have contended Brooks was of unsound mind during his last days.

Witnesses today included: Frank Wright, Denison hotel; A. P. Bode, Standard Oil Company employee; Lewis H. Colvin, 329 East Fall Creek boulevard; Omer Farley, 1230 Cassin avenue, an employee of Brooks, and Dr. Moses E. Leeth, 1260 Reisner avenue.

CALLS BIDS ON ROAD SURFACE TREATMENT

Highway Anti-Dust Program Is Plan of State Head.

Adopting a two-way program in his anti-dust campaign, John Brown, director of the state highway commission, today announced he will readvertise for calcium chloride and seek bids on low type oil June 1.

The proposal is in line with the department's leaning toward use of oil on gravel roads, despite the protestation of motorists who annually complain of oil and gravel that cling to autos.

Brown recently rejected all bids of calcium chloride representatives when nine bidders submitted figures of $26,500 a ton on 3,000 tons of the chemical.

In recent years the oil interests have increased the mileage of their product, making deep inroads into the use of calcium chloride.

WALES RENEWS TARIFF DISPUTE

Local Branches in Foreign Nations Proposed.

By United Press

LONDON, May 22.—The troublesome question of circumventing foreign tariff walls again confronted the business men of Great Britain today as a result of a speech by the prince of Wales.

The prince, reporting on his impressions gained on a recent good-will trade tour of South American countries, brought up the tariff problem again in an address at a banquet Thursday night.

He addressed the sponsors of the British trade exhibition at Buenos Aires, which he formally opened there last March.

"In order to meet tariffs and compete in markets protected by tariff walls," the prince of Wales said, "British manufacturers ought to modify their articles so as to bring them a more favorable classification."

"Where tariffs seriously affect British imports, the only other course in those countries would seem to be open local branches."

ENDS LIFE OVER LOSS OF DOGS

Widow Recluse Takes Gas; Pets Are Seized.

By United Press

MT. CLEMENS, Mich., May 22.—Saturday Mrs. Nellie Connelly, 45-year-old widow and recluse, was forced by the humane society to part with the thirty-five or more mongrel dogs which she kept in her lonely home in Warren township.

Today she was dead, having killed herself with gas because she "couldn't live without her dogs." The woman's body was found in her gas-filled kitchen last night. She had been dead thirty-eight hours. Beside her was a note, which said:

"I am in my right mind, even though folks will think I'm crazy."

"I can't live without my dogs."

In the deserted house where the body lay police found one dog—the only one which had remained.

EDISON WINNERS BECOME CHUMS

'Smartest Boys' Are Pals at College.

By United Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 22.—The precocious pair of youths who share the coveted title of "America's brightest boy" have become fast friends.

A mutual interest in things scientific and kindred preferences in the field of sports apparently have combined to draw together Wilber B. Huston, 13, of Seattle, Wash., and Arthur O. Williams Jr., also 13, of East Providence, R. I., at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where both are students.

Huston, winner of the Thomas A. Edison scholarship contest of 1929, is a sophomore, and Williams, last year's victor, is a freshman.

Public attention has been directed anew to these two prodigies by Edison's announcement that there will be no scholarship contest this year and by the possibility that he may select no more proteges.

Both of the "brightest boys" are popular among fellow undergraduates.
