INSTITUTE HITS HOOVER'S PLAN OF PRIVATE AID

National Group Annoyed at President's Stand Against Public Relief.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance
UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA, July 6.—The immediate and pressing problem of obtaining daily bread will engage the institute of public affairs this week.

It promises also to develop considerable outspoken opposition to President Herbert Hoover's insistence that unemployment relief come from private sources. Already discussions of municipal administration and all those involving the tax rate have been tending to wind up eventually in discussions of the depression, what has been done and what will be done.

A totally unscheduled debate on relief broke out during a meeting on public welfare work over the week-end, when Louis Brownlow, expert in municipal problems, submitted figures of the Russell Sage foundation showing that in the first quarter of 1931, 50 per cent of all the relief administered has come from public agencies, a much higher percentage than in 1929 or 1930.

Controversy 'Crucial'

"In view of this fact it is a little annoying to read a statement from the President that the need will be met by private agencies, and that a dollar given privately is of more value than a thousand dollars given out of a public fund," Brownlow said.

"Next winter public and private agencies both are faced with the greatest emergency in respect to freeing a starving citizen that has ever occurred in our country. With that situation the most futile, cruel thing possible is controversy over forms of relief, and division between public and private aid."

"Where the municipal governments can no longer go on, they will appeal to their states. Where the state can't help, as Arkansas could not last year, an appeal will be made to Washington," Brownlow said.

Discuss Chain Stores

Chain stores are being discussed this week, along with unemployment, racial, regionalism and southern industrialism, and views concerning them which surprised a great many of the institute's members were brought out in the first day's debate.

M. Zimmerman, advertising and merchandising counsel, told the institute that many of the ills suffered by independent stores in the past were their own fault; that recognition of this fact has now placed the independents in an increasingly stronger position, and that the eventual supremacy of the independents through co-operation will be established and the chain store movement checked and perhaps reversed.

Thirty-seven states are now attempting to pass legislation to curb chain stores, but the independents alone by discovering the advantages of co-operation and by capitalizing on individuality.
