Grapes Are Excellent Preserves

BY SISTER MARY

Grapes lend themselves to many delicious preserves and delicacies for winter use. Their richness of flavor and color make them most attractive and luscious with warm breads and savory meats.

If you want to make jelly, choose fruit that is just beginning to "turn" or ripen.

Ripe grapes will not make firm jelly, but those just on the verge of ripening make an excellent jelly of firm texture and fine flavor.

Since grape jelly has a tendency to crystallize, it is a good plan to let the juice stand over night after it has been extracted.

Pour Off Carefully

Then pour it off carefully, settling to the bottom, and use as usual.

Grapes for preserves and juice should be perfectly ripe. Home-made grape juice is delicious for iced drinks and convenient to have on hand. A glass of grape juice for breakfast will make a welcome change from orange juice and grapefruit.

Some interesting experiments have been reported regarding the composition and food value of grape juice.

The experiments were carried out with commercial grape juice, but home canned juice can be substituted with good effect.

Grape juice compares favorably with orange juice in increasing nitrogen retention, and while it can't be counted on to furnish the vitamins found in the fresh fruit, supplies minerals and sugars of fresh grapes.

GRAPE JUICE

Wash grapes and pick from stems. Put into preserving kettle, adding just enough boiling water to prevent burning. Cover and place over a low fire.

Bring slowly to the boiling point and cook until the skins leave the pulp.

Pour into jelly bag and let drip until pulp is dry, about twelve hours. Measure one cup of sugar to four cups of juice.

Put juice into kettle, bring to the boiling point and slowly add sugar. Let boil one minute after all the sugar is in. Pour into hot sterilized bottles or cans, filling containers perfectly full and cork at once.

Dilute juice with water when used.

Grape conserve is excellent made with any variety of grape, although the Concord is rich and inviting.

It seems to me children are really benefited when their mothers have interests outside the home," she said.

"I believe that explains the increased respect so many children have for their fathers as compared with their feeling toward mothers. Being constantly with the mother, the modern boy or girl becomes bored with her."

During the next few weeks Mrs. Meigs will be organizing her staff and finding out how the nation feels about its social problems. Her assistants will work through shopping services, entertainment bureau and other agencies already established.

She must get these details worked out and operating smoothly during the next few months for she anticipates a big rush of business doing Christmas shopping for lagard, uncertain and embarrassed men.

FILLS BERTH AS U. S. 'SOCIAL SECRETARY'

Giant Task Is Taken On by Woman

BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

NEA Service Writer
NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—There will not be a single neglected husband in the United States if Mrs. Katharine Beecker Meigs plans materialize.

Nor a debutante who goes to a party without a "dingbat."

Nor a harassed dinner guest who attacks the salad with the wrong fork.

Mrs. Meigs—blond, attractive and enthusiastic—just has embarked on one of the biggest jobs a woman has ever undertaken. She is the newly appointed "social secretary" of the Postal Telegraph Company, and it is her task to correct America's social errors.

From her desk in a Fifth avenue office Mrs. Meigs will solve etiquette problems, arrange entertainments, send flowers, supply shopping assistance, remind husbands of anniversaries—in short, shoulder all the burdens a social secretary might dispatch for any one in the country who wants this service.

There are so many possible duties involved in this new job that Mrs. Meigs admits she hasn't thought them all out yet.

Originated the Idea

She originated the idea of the department, convinced Postal Telegraph officials it was a worthwhile venture and thereby introduced an entirely new field for women in business.

"I started with the idea of forming a shopping service," Mrs. Meigs explains, "and the rest just developed. Having lived on the Pacific coast, I know that often women in other parts of the country have errands they would like carried out in New York. Unless they have a very patient and devoted friend here to come to their rescue, these wants go unattended."

"Then I began to think that a lot of social problems could be solved from a central bureau. A woman might want to give a party and be relieved of the responsibility of organizing it. Or she might want to know exactly how to lay a table for a formal dinner."

"The idea of furnishing 'dingbats' came next."

Did Commercial Films

The term "dingbats" is new society slang for chaperone and it might be as well to explain here that Mrs. Meigs' name is in the New York social register, that her ancestors arrived in America in 1640, and that in days before the World War she was one of the first New York debutantes to abandon the butterfly whirl of society for a job involving hard work.

That first commercial venture—after her latest—was original.

"I knew a man who had written a scenario he could not sell," she said. "He wanted to produce it with his friends as actors and actresses. I'd never seen a motion picture camera, but photography had always been a hobby with me and I told him I'd make the picture."

"After it was finished, we made another. Then I began doing film for commercial organizations. The second year I made a profit of $5,000—and was I proud of it!"

Benefit to Children

The Meigs' home is on Staten island and Mrs. Meigs believes it is quite as possible for a woman to combine home life and office duties as it is for a man.

It seems to me children are really benefited when their mothers have interests outside the home," she said.

"I believe that explains the increased respect so many children have for their fathers as compared with their feeling toward mothers. Being constantly with the mother, the modern boy or girl becomes bored with her."

What's in Fashion?

New Shades for Stockings

Directed By AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—You're going to look brighter, sayer, more cheerful this fall than for a long time. Why? Because color is fashionable, and fashionable daytime costumes are the colorful ones.

More colors are fashionable this fall than last. Not just black or brown, but green, red and rust in addition. And not just those colors used alone, either, but used in combination with each other.

And this all means—now stockings. Because new shades have been made to blend with the new costume colors.

Fall stocking shades are darker than spring shades, because the darker ones are more in harmony with the darker fall costumes colors.

And these dark shades are neutral ones, too, so they can be worn with different color dresses and coats.

A beige that's too pinky doesn't look well with a red or dark brown costume. But a neutral beige blends perfectly. A taupe that's too grayish doesn't look well with brown. But a neutral taupe does.

Most fashion-knowing women this fall are going to want more taupe stockings than any other color. That's because taupe, which is really beige or brown with a little gray in it, goes with more colors than any other shade.

Beige Tint Accented

Worn with brown, the beige tint is accented and the taupe takes on a brownish look. But you can wear the very same taupe stockings with a black costume, because the gray tint is then accented.

Taupe stockings go with brown costumes, with black costumes, with red or green or rust costumes, and with costumes that combine these colors. Taupe stockings look well with black or brown shoes, too.

So if you're planning to be practical, you'll supply yourself with plenty of taupe stockings just about now.

But for variety's sake—and we all like it—there are other stocking colors designed for year with special costumes.

New Dark Browns

Because there are going to be lots of brown coats and brown dresses, dark brown stockings are coming back into fashion for fall.

They look best with these brown costumes, or with coats trimmed with brown furs. And if you choose this color, be sure the stockings are very dark brown and very sheer.

Some fashionable women are already wearing the new, very sheer black stockings with black formal daytime costumes. They're so fine and so sheer that you're inclined to wonder when they're on, if they really are black.

And for that reason, they're sometimes called "off black," meaning, not quite black.

You'll not see quite so many beige stockings worn this fall as were worn in the spring. Especially not the light beiges. They're too prominent and noticeable with the darker fall costume colors.

But there are some new fall beiges that are darker and with a more brownish cast that do go well with some of the brown dresses and coats.

The place of stockings in the fall costume scheme is a quiet one. There's so much color in other pieces of the costume that stockings have to be inconspicuous.

The best idea is to plan your entire wardrobe color scheme and then buy the stockings that go with those colors.
