

POLICE PLEDGE AID TO PROTECT SCHOOL PUPILS

Strict Enforcement of All
Traffic Laws Ordered by Chief Morrissey.

As a step in the campaign to protect the lives of school children, Police Chief Mike Morrissey today ordered thorough enforcement of all traffic laws by police officers and patrolmen.

Morrissey said he would lend every possible co-operation in The Times' two-week campaign to LOSE A MINUTE AND SAVE A LIFE.

At busy corners near schools where the traffic hazards have been increased by hundreds of school children going to buildings and crossing streets, police officers will stand guard during morning, noon and after-school periods, Morrissey announced.

Education Is Goal

In addition, policemen have been instructed to aid children in crossing streets and to educate them in safety measures.

Morrissey said the children will be given instructions in safety rather than reprimanded for their errors.

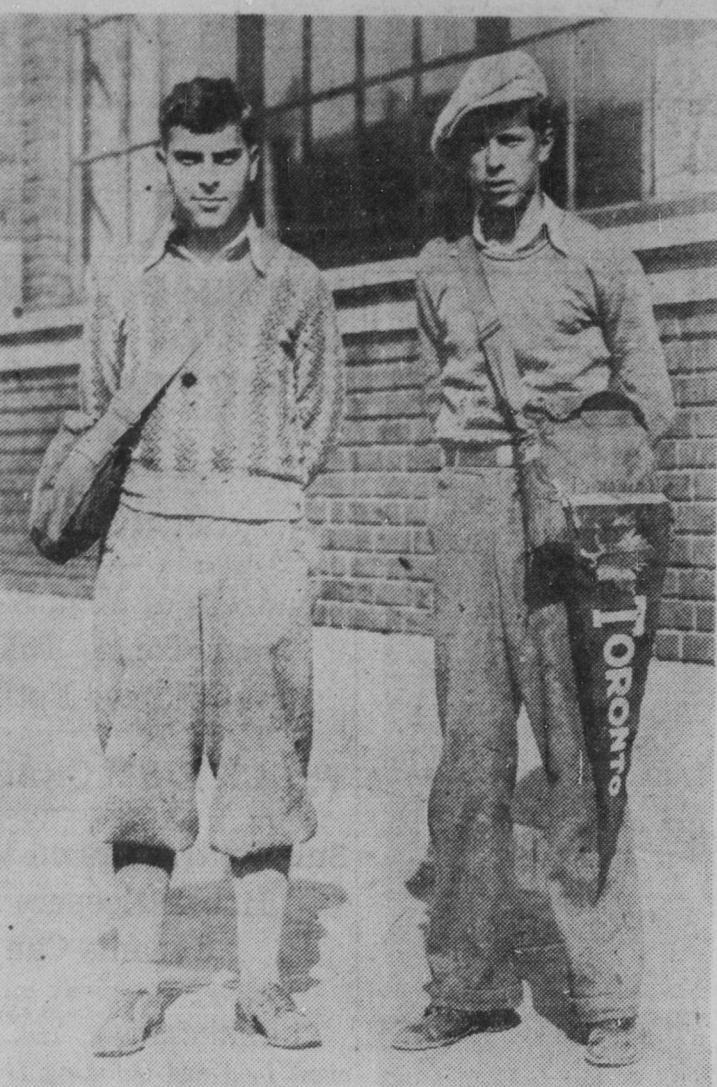

"It is the purpose of the police department to co-operate to the fullest extent in The Times campaign," he said. "Police officers throughout the city will be on the lookout for reckless and speeding drivers."

School Heads Co-operate

"Children are inclined to run and play on their way to and from school. The only way to keep them from becoming involved in accidents that may result in their injury or death, is to educate them." School officials already are co-operating in the campaign.

Neighbors in the vicinity of School 69 today asked the school board and city to provide sidewalks or cinder paths so the children would not be forced into the streets en route to school.
