What's in Fashion?

Coats for the Individualist

Directed By AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—Are you an individualist, who, as Mr. Webster explains, is "one given to independent thought and action?" In other words, do you like your clothes to be different from those the majority wear?

There's just one danger in this—that you may get clothes so different that you look out of fashion and queer. But on the other hand, often the individualist looks different and stays in fashion.

And she certainly can do it this season with some of the new coats. They follow the general fashion lines of the sleeker, wider-shoulders, narrower-hipped silhouette, but have little details that make them stand out as distinguished. One of these coats is the one with plastron collar . . . that bib effect of fur with small, upstanding flared collar. It looks like some of the coats worn in the 1880's, as you can see in the right-hand sketch.

This coat is an informal one with plastron of kid caracul on tweed. But the same idea is used in Hudson seal, lapin, Persian lamb and caracul on rough woollens.

The plastron is a good way to get some color contrast into a coat as a black plastron on a red coat. It doesn't give too much contrast, since the fur is flat and bulky and the space it covers not very large.

Fur Yoke Distinctive

If you want more fur in an individual looking coat, try the one with the real yoke of fur. This yoke, like the plastron, is made of the shorter-haired furs.

Sometimes it's just a yoke that extends to the top of the shoulder and sometimes it extends well over the shoulders and deep in front and back. And then it really looks like a little cape.

In fact, the fur-yoke coat was inspired by the fur capes and collar-ettes worn in the last century over the cloth dress or coat.

The more extreme versions—the bigger capes—are best for the youthful figure. Smaller yoke effect, though, can be worn by most any woman.

The left hand illustration shows the back of a Lucien Lelong coat with one of these smaller yokes. Yoke effects are great favorites with the Paris designers, just as they are with many of the American coat makers.

Half-and-Half Novel

Half fur and half cloth is a good way to express individuality. The center sketch shows one way it's done, with most of the bodice section of fur.

Sometimes the fur extends below the waistline, and when belted, the coat gives the effect of a fur jacket over a cloth skirt.

Coats with quaint leg o' mutton sleeves as individual. These can be as old-fashioned looking as you like—very full at the shoulder with a tight cuff to the elbow. Or modified to be less extreme.

When combined with a small flared collar, they look decidedly Second Empire-ish.
