

Girl Scout Leaders to Open Season

First fall meeting of Girl Scout Leaders' Association will be held at 7:30 tonight in the Board of Trade library.

Mrs. Russell Edwards, president, announces the meeting will be devoted to discussion of plans for the year's work and reorganizing and building up of troops. Preparations also will be made for participation of Scout troops in events sponsored by the organization as a whole.

Demonstration of recreational activities for use in troop meetings will be given by Miss Pauline Norton, leader of Troop 11.

Miss Jean Adamson, local director, and Mrs. Charles E. Cole, commissioner, will extend greetings and assist the leaders at the start of the season's work.

Girl Scout week, which comes at the end of this month and includes the birthday of Juliette Low, the founder of Girl Scouting in this country, will be celebrated this year with seven service days, each day demonstrating a feature of the Girl Scout program.

It is the suggestion of national Girl Scout headquarters that the seven days be begun on Sunday, Oct. 25, with attendance at religious services.

The week program follows:

Monday, Oct. 26, will be Home-Making Day. On this day scouts who have won their housekeeper's badge, and those who are working for it, may do some specific thing about the house, to relieve their mothers.

Tuesday will be Handicraft day, when scouts throughout the country will be exhibiting some of their handwork in their troop meeting places and in department stores.

Wednesday, Oct. 28, is Thrift day. Girl Scouts who have savings accounts, will go in groups to their banks, to deposit their savings for the week.

Thursday is Hostess day, when scouts may plan to entertain their parents and friends in their own troop headquarters or in their homes.

Community service may be demonstrated on Friday, when Girl Scouts throughout the land may offer their services to relief organizations or day nurseries.

Saturday will be Health day, when Girl Scouts will plan to spend as much time out of doors as possible.

Girl Scouts who are working for their dressmaker's badge or their community service badge, may kill two birds with one stone this month, if they will make two new garments for the Needlework Guild of America.

The guild has set aside the week of Oct. 12-17 as national membership week, and membership consists in the contribution of two new garments a year, to be distributed among homes, hospitals and other charities.

Miss Mary Ann Hill Married at Church to H. C. Weeks

Marriage of Miss Mary Ann Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Hill, to Holman C. Weeks, was solemnized Saturday at the University Park Christian church, with the Rev. Lee Sadler officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white tulle, with a high collar, which was lighted with cathedral candles.

Miss Marie Zorn, organist, played Handel's "Largo" and "Trauerlied," and Mrs. A. C. Garnett sang "At Dawning" and "Love You Truly." Mrs. Ralph W. Hill and Mrs. Arthur G. White, sister of the bride, were the bridesmaids. Mrs. Hill wore a fitted gown of beige lace with gold slippers and carried Ophelia roses. Mrs. White wore coral transparent velvet, trimmed with cream colored lace, and cream colored slippers. She carried a

DOWN over one eye, cut away sharply to reveal the hair on the opposite side—this attractive brown velvet hat by Madoux follows the new headline. Its only decoration is a pearl buckle and a flat bow in back.

THE Paradise decoration for hats is taboo in America, but its appearance on many smart French models has influenced this country's millinery mode. The feather balances the shallow brim on this distinctive hat by Mado.

PARTICULARLY becoming to the young girl is this cap-like hat fashioned entirely of brown and beige velvet ribbon, by Mado. The twisted velvet ribbon runs from side to side, ending in a motif over the left ear.

A CONSERVATIVE though smart black velvet with a brim, is this hat by Perle Heller. A small white feather is its only decoration, and from its close-fitting neckline, it breaks away on the left side, showing the hair.

THIS hat of black corded velvet is for early fall wear, but it will "carry on" into the winter. It's a creation of Perle Heller. A Capucine bow is a smart feature. The model will be equally chic with a suit or high fur collar.

IT'S a wise old owl whose tiny beige and green feathers give novelty and chic to this little cap-shaped green velvet hat, by Mado. The opposite side of the hat comes down low over the ear, in the fashion of a beret.

—WHAT'S IN FASHION?—

Wider Shoulders but No Less Feminine

Directed By AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—With all this talk about "wider shoulders for fall," you might ponder, "Are our women turning into a race of pugilists?" Smart feminine shoulders do look wide this season, but not squared-off and pugilistic. No, mam. Even though they're wider, they're more feminine and delicate looking.

Because their wide line is a slanting one—reminiscent of the slanting shoulders women had in the last century when an air of delicacy and the ability to faint were social assets.

True, Schiaparelli has designed a coat with wide, square padded shoulders. But it's only for the very young, very slim figure—so young and so slim it couldn't look like even a lightweight pugilist.

The slanting, feminine kind of wider shoulder is becoming to almost anybody. And it's a fashion in both dresses and coats... part of the new silhouette.

IN dresses you get the slanting, wider shoulder line in several ways. Dropped shoulder yokes, such as shown in the center sketch, are one way. Dropping the yoke over on to the arm carries the shoulder line down in a slanting line. There's no shoulder seam to break the effect of width.

Sleeves cut in one with the bodies of the dress and raglan sleeves, (as shown in the next to the top illustration) have a similar effect.

Of course the fashionable neckline makes the shoulders look wider, because it actually gives a dress more material between neckline and shoulder line.

Higher, wider revers give a wider effect in front, too, and so do broad plastras, especially when they're cut on oval lines.

Coats With Wider Shoulders—Larger armholes, sleeve fullness and fur collars are smart details.

MOST cut-out sleeves are cut with wider arm holes this season, as in the upper coat sketch, and that gives width through the shoulder section. Sometimes they're very wide sleeves... dolman sleeves, in fact.

Saddle shoulders, raglan sleeves, sleeves cut in one with the back of the coat (a Vionnet idea)—they all widen and slant the shoulder line of coats.

Furs are put on to give this effect, too. They are collarettes and yokes of fur that extend down over the shoulders. Some other fur collars are arranged to fasten up high on the shoulders, and when they're of soft, fluffy furs like fox, they, too, add width.

The fashionable lei collar shown in the upper coat sketch is one that gives the wider effect.

And as in dresses, the old leg o' mutton sleeve is back with its fullness at the top. One is shown in the bottom sketch.

HAPPIER HEALTH..

strong bones and sound teeth are absolutely dependent on plenty of sunshine vitamin-D. But science has proven that you seldom get enough from Sunshine. Ordinary foods don't contain enough.

Then how are you going to get it?

Look for the man who wears this badge—
it identifies every City Directory man authorized to ask your co-operation

American Manufacturers and Merchants want to know how they can serve you better

To get the necessary information, Polk City Directory Representatives will call on you to ask certain important questions. Your co-operation is earnestly desired.

NEWS travels fast in this modern age, but even with our great newspapers and the radio, how little we really know about our own neighbors, particularly about their buying habits and preferences. Lack of such information has handicapped manufacturers and merchants in their endeavors to market their goods economically and at a reasonable profit while giving you better value and service.

NOW American Business has taken the important step. It has decided to get the facts. For the first time, every city of 25,000 population and over in the United States is to be surveyed to get accurate and unbiased information. Facts are wanted from the people themselves.

The publishers of the Indianapolis City Directory have undertaken the task of securing the information wanted. They will do so while compiling the data necessary for the new City Directory. Representatives have been appointed who will call on every home in the city and will be identified by the Official Badge shown above. Your name and address should be in the new City Directory. The listing is entirely free and you are entitled to it as a resident. The City Directory man will ask you a series of questions apart from the information desired for the Directory. None of the answers to those questions will appear in the Directory, but will be tabulated separately without any reference to your name. So you may answer all questions freely in the assurance that your confidence will be absolutely respected.

This great work is being undertaken at the request and with the support of leading American industries. These manufacturers and merchants want to know how you buy and what your preferences are for certain articles of personal and household necessity and convenience. When this information has been collected and tabulated it will give, for the first time, the most important, unbiased and accurate report of buying habits and preferences ever made available to American business.

Beginning September 28th, the City Directory men will begin calling on the homes of Indianapolis. Look for the man wearing the identifying badge in his coat lapel. He will surely call on you within the next week or two. He is courteous and will take but a few minutes of your time. He is working in your behalf. Help him all you can.
