

JUSTICE MARTIN OPPOSES RULING ON PROSECUTOR

Holds for Liberal View of Constitution on Taking of Office.

Plea for a liberal interpretation of the Indiana Constitution, which would "lift the dead hand of law and precedent and permit government to function more freely," is set out in a minority opinion of the supreme court on file today with the clerk.

The opinion is the work of Justice Clarence R. Martin, who takes exception to the findings of his colleagues on the bench in the so-called "prosecutors' case."

Martin's opinion argues that the legislature should be permitted to find remedies without being forced to call a constitutional convention.

In two opinions, both coming to the same conclusion, the other four judges of the court held unconstitutional the 1929 statute providing election for the office of prosecutor in districts throughout the state.

This decision upheld the finding of Brown circuit court. Thirteen districts were effected.

Justice David A. Myers wrote one opinion in which his Republican colleague, Justice Julius C. Travis, concurred, while the principal opinion was written by Justice Walter E. Treanor and was concurred in by his Democratic colleague Justice Curtis W. Roll.

Justice Martin was confined to his bed by illness when the decision was handed down two weeks ago, and, upon his return, prepared the minority opinion, filed Wednesday.

DEPRESSION ADDS TO U. S. EMPLOYEES' WORK

Application for Civil Service Jobs Are Increased Tenfold.

The present economic situation not only has cut down employment, but increased the work of federal employees tremendously, it was revealed today by Harry Trimpe, head of the civil service bureau here.

"Where we usually put out from fifty to seventy-five applications for stenographers' examinations, 'this year we were forced to distribute 532," said Trimpe.

Although Trimpe is unable to estimate national figures, it was revealed that where the government usually distributes 5,000 applications for stenographers, this year 57,645 were put out.

Many persons apply for civil service positions even when they have no knowledge of the requirements, Trimpe said, and hundreds of persons "grasp at straws," even though they are told in advance that only experienced workers are taken.
