Social Elite Re-Enact New York's Early History at Beaux Arts Ball

By United Press.
NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—Bucks-kinnattired trappers from Park avenue, Indian braves from Sutton place, stolid Dutch burghers from Westchester and colonial grand dames from Long Island re-enacted the early history of New York early today at the annual Beaux Arts ball.

Some 3,000 of the city's socially elite participated in the affair in the Waldorf-Astoria. The colonial motif was in honor of the bi-centennial of George Washington.

Starting at midnight, the early life of New York from Indian times up to the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States was depicted in pageant and tableaux. Many historical characters were portrayed by their present-day descendants.

Dr. William Jay Schieffelin, as the reincarnation of Peter Minuit, purchased Manhattan island from Neshoba (William Jay Schieffelin Jr.), a chief of the Canarsie Indians, for $24 worth of rum, bears and Dutch guilders.

"Offer him $23 and the New York Central," shouted a guest attired as a trapper.

"Offer him $22 and throw in the Crotona watershed," shouted another guest, waving aloft a straw-covered bottle.

From the arrival of Hendrick Hudson in the Half Moon and the times when Peter Stuyvesant stumped about the battery on his wooden leg, the pageant passed to English colonial scenes and the Revolutionary war period.

Then it came to a climax in the inauguration of Washington amid the huzzahs of the populace April 30, 1789, followed by the inaugural ball. Kenneth Murchison portrayed George Washington.

Private banquets after the manner of earlier dinners held by Dutch patrons and revolutionary leaders were held by small parties in numerous private suites. Some of the suites were designated by distinctly uncolonial names—"prohibition pavilion," "hiccough-hall" and the like.

At dawn, grand dames in bouffant skirts escorted by colonists in knee breeches bundled into 15-and-5 taxicabs for home and aspirin.
