

Pick 'Merry Widow' for 1932 Follies

"The Merry Widow" has been chosen as the script for the 1932 edition of "Fairview Follies," annual Butler university musical production.

It was chosen from four selections by Fred Winter, chairman of the script committee, at a joint meeting of the faculty committee, headed by Professor Dale A. Beeler, and members of the Men's Union governing board. Norman Hannah will direct the production.

Tentative plans have been made to hold the show at Caleb Mills hall, probably May 13 and 14. Definite plans will be made this week.

Production budget is in charge of a faculty auditing committee headed by Professor G. F. Leonard of the college of education.

Fairview Follies each year is sponsored by the Men's Union.

CHOOSE RIGHT DIET

Select Children's Food With Care

This is the fourth of a series of six daily articles on the proper care and nutrition of children, published in this newspaper in co-operation with the American Child Health Association. The present depression and unemployment has made this a grave problem in many families where a dollar must go farther now than ever before.

BY SISTER MARY

Written Especially for NEA Service and The Times

WHEN we are planning low cost menus we should give children the first consideration. Unless an adequate diet is provided, much harm may result, not only through childhood, but adult life as well. Naturally, the foods that make up the list for the planning of low cost meals are limited in variety.

However, clever seasoning and proper cooking will do much to make the cheapest and simplest meals interesting.

BREAKFAST MENUS

Breakfast No. 1—

Apple, whole wheat cereal with whole milk, cornmeal muffins with oleomargarine or butter, milk for children and coffee for adults. (Since apples are chosen as the breakfast fruit, a crisp bread is not necessary.)

Breakfast No. 2—

Banana, rolled oats, whole milk, crisp toast with nut butter, cocoa, coffee.

Breakfast No. 3—

Tomato juice, cornmeal mush fried for adults and older children and steamed and served with milk for small children, crisp broiled bacon, milk, coffee.

Breakfast No. 4—

Whole orange, orange juice for baby under 3 years of age, whole grain combination cereal, whole milk, spiced milk, coffee.

The choice of cereals is fairly wide and the home-maker should take advantage of this by varying the breakfast porridge each morning.

The whole grain cereals are available in corn, oats and wheat in various forms that are cheap and full of food value. A dish of well-cooked cereal served with fresh or an "evaporated" milk furnishes many carotenes of protein, fat and carbohydrates, as well as some mineral constituents.

THE breakfast fruit is essential, but remember that tomatoes, canned or fresh, can take the place of oranges.

Apples, bananas and prunes are usually cheap and are good sources of vitamins A and B.

Tomatoes and oranges and grapefruit are the richest sources of vitamin C. When oranges are 1 cent each they can be used as the breakfast fruit, otherwise it's a good idea to use a cheaper fruit or tomatoes.

When tomatoes are used in some other meal during the day, apples or bananas may be relied on to furnish vitamins and minerals for the morning meal.

A crisp bread, such as toast or bread sticks, is important with every meal, but especially with the breakfast made up of a soft fruit, soft cereal and beverage.

The crisp food not only enforces tooth exercise, but is an aid toward digestion.

THE beverage for children should never be tea or coffee. Older children may have a "cereal" coffee, but small children should have milk or cocoa.

Evaporated milk and milk in its similar forms are adequate and will help greatly to cut food expense. Professor Sherman of Columbia university says, "Any kind of milk is nutritionally more like any other kind of milk than is any other food."

When we realize that one "tall" can of evaporated milk with an equal amount of water added is as good for children as one quart of pasteurized whole milk, it becomes less difficult to provide that necessary "quart of milk for every child."

The absolute minimum amount of milk on which a child can grow is one pint.

If fresh bottled milk can not be procured, evaporated milk can be flavored slightly with cocoa or a little spice, diluted with water and used as a breakfast drink.

A breakfast of this type is simple, cheap and nourishing. Cereals are one of the cheapest sources of energy and go far to allay the actual pangs of hunger.

While cereal proteins lack certain qualities, they can be made efficient if supplemented with a small amount of protein rich in the substances they lack. This explains the necessity of serving milk with cereals.

The accompanying breakfast menus may help you plan others. Next: Luncheon Menus.

MANNERS AND MORALS

By JANE JORDAN

LETTERS from readers relating their own experiences and asking questions about them are invited. Comment on the advice given is invited. The most interesting letters will be published in part.

HERE are the letters from men telling how they feel about marrying a girl who has had a previous love experience. I asked for these letters to throw more light on the way men's minds work. The letter shows that the average man feels that the woman he ought to grant the woman the same forgiveness which she accords him, but emotionally he is unable to do so.

While they have all the sympathy in the world for the girl who has fallen, they hope and pray that they won't be the one who is expected to marry her. Will she make a good wife? Surely! For the other fellow! But may heaven preserve them from such an experience.

If men fall in love with a girl before they learn her history, their impulse is to overlook it, but the knowledge persists like a burr in the consciousness and seems bound to mar their happiness to a certain extent.

Some prefer to know the truth about the past, but most of them would rather keep their illusions, even at the expense of truth. The conclusion drawn by Jane Jordan, after reading the letters, which she has no space to publish in full, is that the girl whose goal is an ideally happy marriage would better avoid experiences before marriage as she would the plague.

Dear Jane Jordan—May I say a word about the lady who has loved too well? In my opinion, her previous experience very possibly makes her a better wife for the man she marries, always excepting some damage to her physique or to her psyche, and more especially excepting some social consequence, such as blackmail, which may rear its head later and damage her husband as well as herself. But she is a fool if she lets her joint happiness be telling. We are not governed truly by our nose, but by our emotion. No matter how reasonable her husband might be, neither how firmly he thought he had solved the situation, deep down in him would be a hurt, a resentment, a jealousy, called it what you will, that would spoil the perfection of his feeling for her.

Each man wants a virgin intacta, and though he admits that experience may be profitable, he wants to furnish that experience himself.

Dear Jane Jordan—Yes, a girl with a past can get a man and be happy for a while, unless she does not tell all. For the Lord's sake, Billie tell him all before-hand. I married a girl with a past and she told part, but held back the most important thing. We lived in terror for a little more than a year, both suspicious of the other. Now, we are divorced. So if you want happiness with a man, tell him everything, and if he loves you it will make no difference.

BROKEN-HEARTED BILL.

Comment by Jane Jordan—But my dear Bill, if you never had known anything, you would have been married yet! And why did the mere date of the confession, rather than the confession itself, so vitally affect your happiness?

Dear Jane Jordan—Here's what I think: Why blame a girl for the past? If she is making an effort to be good, there is no reason why a fellow shouldn't marry her. A fellow's past is usually more scarier than a girl's, but he can outlive it, while she must suffer a long time.

But here's what I would do: I'd frank in saying that if the incident happened to me, I wouldn't marry the girl. I'd think about what my friends would say. I'd be too selfish to think of my own short comings and mistakes. It would be easy for me to criticize her. You never know until the crucial test comes, however.

YOUNG FELLOW.

Dear Jane Jordan—Women are wrong in thinking that we men expect the women we marry to be angels. We don't. But after marriage we do expect them to be faithful, virtuous, agreeable and behind. A man who wouldn't overlook one slip would make a poor husband and a consideration. What the woman did shouldn't matter so much as what she does now and continues to do.

Dear Jane Jordan—If a girl made her mistake only because she really cared for a fellow, that's not so hard to overlook. But if she wanted thrills, excitement and dated as many fellows as possible, if she smoked and drank and accepted clothes and money; then if she's tired of it all and wanted to get married and have children, that's worse.

Dear Jane Jordan—As for marrying a girl with a past, that is a hard thing for a boy to decide. If a boy loves a girl well enough to marry her, if he has a past himself, and the girl confesses to her past, I don't see where the boy has much room to object.
