At the same time, another big army was to invade east Prussia. Hindenburg, himself, took charge of the troops in east Prussia and in February was fought the second battle of the Masurian lakes, resulting in 110,000 Russians being captured.

Hindenburg believed, if given the troops, he could put Russia out of action completely in 1915, compel Russia to sue for peace, and thus give Germany opportunity to concentrate all her troops on the western front in the end.

But Falkenhayn did not believe Russia could be conquered. Napoleon had tried and failed. So Hindenburg never got all the troops he wanted.

He had beaten the Russians nearly every time, but the Russian armies still were gigantic, still full of fighting spirit.

BUT Hindenburg drove on Libau, Mitau, Lemberg were captured. Novo Georgievsk, with a garrison of 100,000 men, fell. Then Warsaw was taken, and Grodno. In six weeks the Russian front had receded 150 miles.

Grand Duke Nicholas was removed and the czar, himself, assumed command. Once more the Germans moved, particularly in the north.

Riga, Kovno, and Vilna were occupied, and by the late summer of 1915 the Russians began to think of defending Petrograd from capture.

But in his main object, Hindenburg had failed. His attempt to encircle the main Russian armies had not come off. The Russian front remained unbroken.

Whatever the enthusiastic German populace might think, Hindenburg knew Russia still had plenty of soldiers, some very good generals, and her food plains were unoccupied.

IN 1916 Russia began to move again. Her armies effected little against the Germans, but in the south, under Brusiloff, the Russians smashed the Austrian Fourth corps, reached the Carpathians and saw the Austrians in Bukovina run away.

But Russia's strength was broken, as events were soon to prove when she sued for peace. History was to show that Hindenburg, then nearly 70, had succeeded, where Napoleon failed, in conquering the land of the czar.

Then things came to a standstill, but the allies scored by bringing Rumania with a million men into the war. In the meantime, Falkenhayn denied further troops to Hindenburg.

He needed them all for the luckless and savage attack on Verdun, where the flower of the German army perished in a futile effort to crush the French.

By July, 1916, the kaiser and his flatterers came to a sense of realities. Accompanied by Falkenhayn and others, they came to the castle of Pless in Upper Silesia. Hindenburg and Ludendorff were sent for.

Falkenhayn resigned and Hindenburg was made commander-in-chief of all the armies, with Ludendorff as his quartermaster general.

Hindenburg Is Victor Where Napoleon Failed; Crushes Great Russian Armies

This is the fourth of six exclusive stories on President Paul von Hindenburg, Germany's greatest modern figure, who is now a candidate for a second term in the national election to be held in Germany on Sunday, March 13.

BERLIN, Feb. 25.—In the gray light of an early morning in the latter part of August, 1914, an old gentleman in civilian attire nervously paced up and down the railway platform at Hanover, accompanied by a solicitous old lady.

It was Paul von Hindenburg and his wife waiting for the special train which was speeding from the west front in Belgium, bearing General Eric Ludendorff, who was to be his chief of staff.

The two men never had met. All that Ludendorff knew about Hindenburg was that he had attained high rank, had retired, had reached the age of 67, but was, nevertheless, reported to have sharp wits and considerable military ability.

It is doubtful if Hindenburg knew that much about Ludendorff. German military headquarters was displeased greatly with Colonel-General von Prittwitz, who was in command in the east, and who was clamoring that he must withdraw his troops beyond the Vistula.

This would mean giving up most of east Prussia to the Russians, and if the Germans then were beaten, would open the way for the Russian steam roller to go crashing toward Berlin.

Then somebody at general headquarters remembered Hindenburg; that he was east Prussian and formerly had been stationed at Koenigsburg, so that he probably was well acquainted with the terrain.

Ludendorff also was an east Prussian. It would be a good scheme to send the older man as general and the younger man as strategist. So said, so done.

WHEN Ludendorff's special train drew in, he stepped down, saluted, and shook hands. It was the first time the famous pair had met. They quickly boarded their train and started off in haste for Koenigsburg.

The German situation was serious enough. Their army had General Rennenkampf, with a huge Russian army on one side and General Samsonoff, with another army, farther south.

Maybe Hindenburg knew something about the hatred between the two Russian commanders, which had begun in the Russo-Japanese war. Whatever it was, he determined to put his fortunes to the test.

He withdrew most of the troops facing Rennenkampf, leaving only a slight screen. He concentrated all the troops he could secure in an endeavor to draw Samsonoff into a trap. It succeeded.

The Russian army was almost annihilated. Ninety thousand prisoners were taken. Samsonoff shot himself on the battlefield, which Hindenburg named Tannenberg.

It was the revenge for the defeat his ancestors had suffered here nearly 500 years before. Joy bells were rung all over east Prussia.

Germany, as a whole, heard of this old dug-out for the first time. Small fortunes were made selling his pictures.

HINDENBURG now went hotfoot after Rennenkampf's army, which narrowly escaped a trap and got out of German territory. By mid-September, east Prussia was cleared of Russians.

But, as a whole, things were not going well for the central powers. The allies had more than held their own in the west. They had won the battle of the Marne.

In the east, the Russians were in Galicia and were threatening Hungary.

Hindenburg was made commander-in-chief of the armies of the east. As such, he wanted to make an offensive toward Warsaw, but his plans were limited by the timid Falkenhayn, then generalissimo of the German forces.

Notwithstanding that, he did lead his armies near to Warsaw, and then was compelled to fall back, because of Austrian defeats.

Then Hindenburg turned about and captured Lodz in Poland.

THE Grand Duke Nicholas, chief of the Russian armies, had lost 250,000 men in six weeks and winter was coming on.

Nevertheless, in response to the call of the allies in the west, he prepared another grandiose plan, involving millions of men. One huge army was to force its way through the snowy passes of the Carpathians into the wheat plains of Hungary—the breadbasket of the central powers.

At the same time, another big army was to invade east Prussia. Hindenburg, himself, took charge of the troops in east Prussia and in February was fought the second battle of the Masurian lakes, resulting in 110,000 Russians being captured.

Hindenburg believed, if given the troops, he could put Russia out of action completely in 1915, compel Russia to sue for peace, and thus give Germany opportunity to concentrate all her troops on the western front in the end.

But Falkenhayn did not believe Russia could be conquered. Napoleon had tried and failed. So Hindenburg never got all the troops he wanted.

He had beaten the Russians nearly every time, but the Russian armies still were gigantic, still full of fighting spirit.

MOTOR LICENSE DEADLINE NEAR

Arrests for Using Old Auto Plates Start Next Week.

Motorists were warned today by James Carpenter, head of the state automobile license bureau, that Monday is the last day for use of 1931 plates and arrests will start Wednesday.

Sales of 1932 plates are about 35 per cent less than on the same date last year, Carpenter said, but receipts are $3,271,193.94, which is $62,857.99 larger than on this date in 1931.

However, last year contents of forty mail bags received from branch offices had not been included in the total. Today there are no unaccounted branch office receipts in Carpenter's office.

Despite the fact that a new law, effective this year, compelled buying of plates for automobiles of cities and other governmental units, officials expect receipts will be lower.

"clear road ahead!"

It's great to feel that way . . . and you do . . . when the blood has the "feel" of enough rich red cells

REGARDLESS of age—be fortified with plenty of "red blood." That's p-e-l-l-s happiness.

So frequently work, worry, colds and sickness reduce the red-cell count in the blood . . . then our spirits go down as the blood cells are lowered.

The process may be so gradual that we wonder "what is the matter."

It is well to give thought to those invisible—yet precious red-blood-cells—the "ships" in the blood, carrying nourishment to all parts of the body.

"That tired feeling" may be a warning . . . so are pimples, boils and paleness.

Why not take steps to overcome this trouble? A general run-down condition means a lack of normal resistance to infection and disease. A lagging appetite often leads to underweight and ill health.

You cannot be low in strength and be happy—let's be happy.

For generations S.S.S. as a tonic has been helping people gain New Strength, better health and happiness. Its successful record of over 100 years in restoring strength and vitality to the blood surely warrants your giving it a good trial.

Why not start taking S.S.S. today?—the larger size represents a price saving.

Why you should be interested in your Blood Count

(Left) Microscopic view of healthy red-blood-cells. They carry nourishment and oxygen to every part of the body—they also remove impurities from the tissues.

(Right) Weak red-blood-cells—only 50 per cent of normal strength. Such a condition is often responsible for body weakness, paleness, a sallow complexion, pimples and boils.
