FEEDER LINE'S ABANDONMENT IS PROTESTED

Commission Weighs Fate of 'Toonerville Trolley' on Northeast Side.

The "Toonerville Trolley" of Indianapolis awaits its fate at the hands of the public service commission.

If the trolley is abandoned by order of the commission, when ruling is made one week from today then the Marys and Johnnys in the vicinity north and east of Twenty-seventh street and College avenue, can no longer "bum" rides to get the family's beefsteak.

But if the commission listens to 250 petitioners in the neighborhood of the line, then it will be operated despite bad tracks, tortoise-like speed and family marketers.

Frank T. Singleton, public service commissioner, heard representatives of 250 petitioners objecting to the abandonment of the line in addition to officials of the Indianapolis Street Railway Company today in the statehouse.

James P. Tretton, general manager of the car company, testified the line was being operated at a loss of between $3,000 and $4,000 yearly. He declared it would cost $25,000 to put in new tracks and the line's present equipment is antiquated and unsafe.

"The dinky motorman collects no fares," he said.

Tretton admitted, following the hearing, that the line was used by children sent to the grocery or neighborhood pharmacy by their parents.

Miss Ruth Purvis, representing the neighborhood, asserted workers and school children would be forced to walk five to six blocks if the line were abandoned.

The old trolley has its terminals at Twenty-seventh street and College avenue and Thirtieth street and Cornell avenue.

Petition to discontinue the line proposes a bus line to serve the neighborhood on the north and east at Keystone avenue and the Millersville road. The proposed bus line also would serve as a substitute for the feeder bus route now running from Thirtieth and Delaware streets to Keystone avenue and the Millersville road. It would be a through line to Monument Circle.
