Liberal Arts Hailed as Road to Journalism

"The best school of journalism is the liberal arts college," said Dean Gordon Jennings Laing, author and editor of the University of Chicago Press, at the final luncheon meeting of the Woman's Press Club at the Columbia Club Tuesday. "What the journalist needs," he continued, "is a general education with some courses in technical journalism. The journalist needs a broad education from which to draw in order to influence properly the large number of people who mold their opinion in accordance with his writing."

Dean Laing's subject was "The School, the College and Journalism."

In grade school training he pointed out the necessity of determining special aptitudes. "The educational waste today is stupendous," he said, "for diagnosis of special talents are too often overlooked."

"It is a mistake to introduce the technique of journalism into the high school," Dean Laing stated. "The student should acquire a foundation in literature, Latin and languages during this period, and thus develop judgment and discrimination."

At the speakers' table were: Mrs. John Hays Butler, program chairman, who introduced the speaker; and Mrs. Fred S. Purnell, Altica, who sang. Other guests were Mrs. E. C. Toner, retiring president; Mrs. Paul Shideler, incoming president; Mrs. Gertrude F. Tommer, Bloomington; Mrs. Purnell and Dean Laing.

Replace Your Heavy Chairs With Fireside Cushions

NO one would suspect this neat-looking divan behind the coffee table of harboring much in the way of sleeping comfort, hiding as it does all traces of any give-away edges of sheets. The oblong drop-leaf table in the opposite corner is another boon to the one-room apartment housekeeper.

Its ample middle drawer is a convenient place to park the silver that appears at meal times or playing cards, papers and pens—things that are apt to be called for at a moment's notice. Small oriental rugs on the polished floor complement the maple furniture and the homespun chair covers.

NOW that spring is here and apartments that during past months have seemed cozy begin to look stuffy and overcrowded, the urge to chuck heavy chairs out the window causes many a housewife sleepless nights.

Guests have to sit on something, however, and if a person has no lighter pieces to take the place of the old favorites that have become

WHAT'S IN FASHION?—Men Like Contrast Outfits

NEW YORK, May 11.—You're going to see more and more men rigged out in regular sports outfits and fewer and fewer resort to out-of-town wear this year. There's going to be color, and contrast, . . . and lots of comfort. You'll see, as we saw at Palm Beach this winter, brown tweed coats worn with gray flannel trousers. (No . . . not a misprint, we said brown with gray.) And a gray tweed coat with tan trousers is another one for sports wear.

Such a contrast looks great with a blue shirt, button-down collar, checked tie and snap brim felt hat.

And shoes—all white except where the lines of the black shoes show. Of course the perennial spic-and-span white flannels will be worn, too. With a blue or brown double-breasted coat.

Blue or gray striped shirt and sailor straw hat make good companions for this get-up.

Pastel striped tie and pastel socks put in a cool new stroke of color. Accompanied by brown-and-white shoes.

Another way of showing that you know the ropes in sports clothes—tan or brown flannel coat, single-breasted with a half-belted back, worn over striped serge or cord trousers.

Slick accessories with this are a Panama hat, white shirt with medium pointed collar, white silk socks checked in a color, and brown-and-white sports shoes. And a foulard tie in one of those all-over patterns.

MANLY MEN AND MORALS By JANE JORDAN

EVEN if your case seems hopeless, there is comfort in stating it to someone who understands the situation. Write your letter to Jane Jordan now.

Dear Jane Jordan—I don't think you can help me, but I feel that when I write to you I am talking to a friend. I am a married man, 18 to 19 not much older. Now I can see it wasn't love for we do not talk the same language. I was raised very religiously. He isn't. He has been married seven years and has two young children. He isn't a man, but as I was raised, my husband isn't mean. He drinks and smokes, but he does his best. If you don't love a man, you don't love him.

Three years ago I met a man of my own class and we loved each other. I know his wife well and know they aren't united. He is older than I am, but he has the same things I do. We believe in the same things. I don't want to leave him. I don't want to leave him. I don't want to leave him.
