MAN NERS AND MORALS By JANE JORDAN

If you are pleased and helped by Jane Jordan's replies, write and tell her so. If you are displeased, you are equally welcome to express yourself.

I HAVE on my desk several letters from wives who are distressed about the way their husbands treat the children. Before the children came, these couples got along reasonably well, but the advent of the babies brought dissensions of various sorts over their upbringing.

Mothers complain that fathers are irritable with the little ones and nag at them continually. Fathers correct the children for trifles that mothers do not even notice.

These husbands accuse their wives of spoiling the children, and try to counteract this indulgence by being mean to them. Otherwise, the wives have no fault to find with the husbands, who are hard-working, faithful men.

The fathers declare that they love the children just as much as the mothers do, but the mothers find this hard to believe, and as a result their love is on the wane. These women have asked me to explain the attitude of the men.

Wife Must Decide If She's Right

While it can not be denied that children often form a deep and powerful bond between the partners of a marriage, it also is true that just as frequently they cause estrangement. To understand the causes for such estrangement, we have to look deep into the natures of both men and women and recognize their physical and mental differences.

To begin, man does not have woman's deep instinct for reproduction. Generally speaking, a man does not want a baby. What he wants is a 21-year-old son. You seldom see a man go into ecstasies over a tiny baby.

A woman, however, gets her chief kick out of maternity when the baby is little and innocent and wholly dependent; a man waits until the child is old enough to be capable of companionship before he pays much attention to it.

Tiny Baby Fails to Stir Joy

The father's role of bread winner does not call for the intense preoccupation with the child which falls to woman's lot. His part in the creation of the new life is but momentary, while woman's is extended over a long period of the closest possible connection.

It is only natural that the great physical differences of parenthood should give rise to psychological differences just as great.

To the man, the child is an incident subsidiary to the chief aim of his life, which is providing. To the woman it is the climax of her whole career, the most colossal experience that life has to offer. If these sexual differences are not understood thoroughly by both husband and wife, the chances for misunderstanding are legion.

The wife does not understand her husband's casual attitude toward his fatherhood. The husband does not understand the wife's absorption in her motherhood. Each partner ex-

Hand-Knit, Rough Bathing Suit Is the Vogue This Year

Photographs from Van Raalte.

The belt on this herringbone weave suit is the end of the brassiere straps, which cross below the shoulders and insure perfect support.

FASHIONABLE mermaids this year are insisting on a hand-knit, roughish look to their bathing suits. They are getting them in brief, seaworthy models that are soft to touch as they are homespun in appearance.

White seems to be leading, with even the least expensive suits perfectly opaque, no matter how wet the ocean. Egg-yolk yellow is another favorite, and it is stunning with a deep tan.

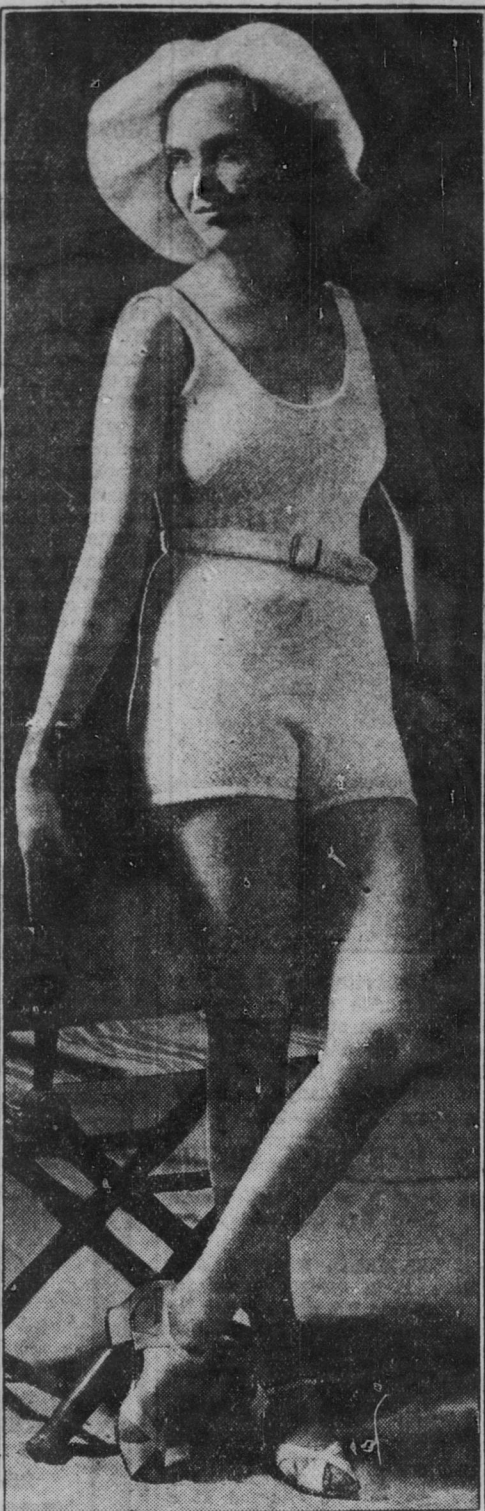

Although the girls of buxom silhouette get a break by finding most suits cut with a double brassiere top, they are somewhat less in luck over the cut of the trunks.

Undeniably, the smarter suits are those which have no skirt over their union-suitish fit, but no amount of style perception will make them becoming to a plump person.

NO MORE BACKACHES

LIKE so many other women—perhaps like yourself—Mrs. Burroughs used to suffer from severe backaches every month. Then she tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Shortly afterwards she wrote to us, "I believe it to be the best medicine I ever used. I sleep well, my nerves are better, my appetite is improved and I am getting stronger all the time."

What's in Fashion? Light, Eye-Shading Hats Popular

NEW YORK, July 5.—Everybody dressed women are wearing these hats with their town clothes, too. They have the right tailored air.

But even more women are choosing for town... and for spectator sports... a wider brimmed hat, like the one at the top.

The same cool fabrics are used for these. And that's the shape you want if you're planning on a panama... that feather-light hat that goes anywhere and with anything.

White is the smartest color (or natural panama). And you want to have plenty of hat bands in various colors to be slipped on as you change costume.

Down around the beaches... or anywhere where the sun-glare is extreme... you'll see really wide-brimmed floppy hats.

Linon's the fabric for them, stitched to give body. And if there's any trimming at all (as there often isn't) it will be just a band or bow of the fabric.

White, pastels, deep colors—even black—are smart in this hat. It's shown in the lower right sketch.

If you're not worrying about sun-stroke—just want something cool and light to help keep your hair in place—a crocheted mesh hat does it. We'll send you free directions for making them if you send the coupon.

For golf, for example, a neat fitting narrow brimmed hat of pique, doette (looks like glove fabric), boucle or wool mesh jersey does the trick. You can see the type in the illustration at the lower left.

Lots of smartly and sensibly
