

VERANDA VOTE DRIVE WAGED BY ROOSEVELT

Nominee Directs Activities From Spacious Porch of N. Y. Mansion.

BY PAUL H. KING
United Press Staff Correspondent
ALBANY, N. Y., July 30.—Franklin Roosevelt's "front porch" campaign for the presidency threatens to equal the now famed veranda campaign of the late President Warren G. Harding.

The spacious front porch of the executive mansion suddenly has been turned into the unofficial campaign headquarters of the Democratic nominee.

Since advent of warm weather, Roosevelt has directed practically all of his affairs from there.

All of Roosevelt's principal conferences, "harmony talks" with leaders still out of the fold, and plans for campaign strategy have been directed from a rustic, rickety swing which occupies a prominent spot on the "gallery."

Has Office on Porch

The porch, cluttered with chairs, tables and flowers, virtually has been tied into an office. Telephones have been installed near the swing. Special tables have been tied up for dictation. A booming radio is near.

The fact that the New York Governor has not yet planned a lengthy stump campaign has led persons close to him to believe he would not crown upon a strenuous "front porch" bid, similar to the one that helped carry Harding to the White House.

Practically all of Roosevelt's public appearances since his nomination at Chicago have been from the porch.

Ideal for Campaign

The night he was nominated he was forced to accede to the cheers of several hundred persons and walk to the veranda and say "Hello."

Later at a demonstration sponsored by Albany's supporters of Alfred Smith, he spoke to 20,000 persons who clogged the picturesque mansion campus.

The mansion porch would be ideal for a campaign. The porch overlooks the sloping front lawn in which many thousands of persons could gather.

SUB RESCUE IS SHOWN IN FILM

Navy Diving Bell Operation Is Feature of Reel.

Submarine disasters, such as the recent loss of the French submarine Promethee with sixty-one aboard, the British Poseidon, with twenty, the American S-51 with thirty-seven and the S-4 with forty, may be a thing of the past if the new navy diving bell, shown in the current issue of The Indianapolis Times-Universal Newsreel, proves as efficient in practice as it is in rehearsal.

During a staged demonstration in the sea at Point Loma, Cal., the new safety device, a huge pear-shaped steel bell, carrying a crew of several officers and men, easily drops to the hull of the submarine S-4, submerged under sixty feet of water, and brings up four of the underwater craft's crew. The entire test was made under "accident" conditions.

Graham McNamee, veteran radio announcer and the screen's famous talking reporter, explains the operation of the navy invention as the "rescues" are being made.

Other important and interesting events reported in the news-reel are the opening of the British trade conference in Ottawa, and the reading of the king's message, scenes at the battle front in the bitter labor war near Marseilles, Ill., sensational feats performed by expert lumber jacks at the world's championship "rollo" at Longview, Wash., successful trout of a new plane that resembles a potato bug.
