WHAT'S IN FASHION?—Modern Bedroom Is Growing More Fashionable

NEW YORK, July 30.—The clothes hanging in the bedroom closet may savor of Victorianism . . . which is the smart thing for today's feminine costumes to do. But many of today's bedrooms themselves are as ultra-modern looking as fashionable modern type furniture can make them.

The bedroom—so many fashionable people think—is a fine place to start using modern furniture. And the modern bedroom is certainly getting more and more popular. One reason is because it's an individual room . . . used by one person, or at most, two. So fewer persons' tastes have to be considered.

As a matter of fact, though, today's modern furniture is not the wild, bizarre, angular furniture that shocked many people a few years back.

It's been much simplified, and today easily can be used in any room.

But it's especially good for bedrooms, because, again, individual—even daring—color schemes can be worked out in rooms used only by one or two persons. And individual color schemes seem to go with modern furniture.

The suite illustrated is typical of the furniture you find in the bedrooms of fashionable homes who have "some modern."

See how simple are its lines. There are wide areas of flat surface in which the grain of beautiful woods can be brought out.

Modern furniture carries little decoration, most of its beauty coming from the color and grain of the unusual woods used.

Primavera, a wood of Mexico and central America, is one, and that's what the suite illustrated is made of.

In color it varies from creamy white to straw yellow and sometimes is called "white mahogany," though it does not belong to the mahogany family.

Other woods used effectively in modern furniture are African mahogany, American or oriental walnut, maple, macassar ebony, rosewood and cherry.

Small modern pieces make effective contrasts in rooms of any type and many of them can be purchased unfinished and finished to suit your own taste.

Our bulletin on finishing furniture will help you. It's yours—free—if you send the coupon.
