

Dry Law Is Backed by Club Women

Topics of interest to clubwomen of Indiana were discussed at the first all-Indiana Federation of Clubs' day, held Monday at Bethany Park. Sixty members of the Indiana federation attended.

Mrs. Edwin I. Poston, Martinsville, second vice-president, was presiding officer. Greetings were extended by Mrs. Edwin N. Canine, Terre Haute, state president, and Mrs. Robert A. Hicks, Cambridge City, first vice-president. Mrs. Frank Donner, Greenastle, recording secretary, also was present.

The group moved to send a letter today to the Indiana state senate upholding the prohibition law as it now stands. This action is not official, but duplicates former official action of the federation.

Report on Law Work

Reports of other measures of interest to the group now pending in the legislature were discussed, and plan, made for work on them. Outstanding in this group is the law on school attendance and child labor law. Mrs. John W. Moore, Indianapolis, chairman of the legislation committee, reported on this work.

Others who spoke were Mrs. R. L. McIntosh, Washington, who lauded the work of clubs in their counties; Mrs. Frank Donner, Mrs. Frederick G. Balz, Indianapolis, and Mrs. Canine, who told interesting highlights of the convention of the general federation held in Seattle in June.

American Designers Flout Paris and Show Glamorous Creations of Own

The costumes shown here were sketched for The Times and NEA Service by Barbara Schwinn at the American show.

The evening wrap, right, of white Lyons velvet, is a Billy Gordon design. Big sable sleeves that are patterned along dolman lines are so effective that no other trimming is needed. The line of the sable follows the body line of the back of the coat. The front of the coat is cut on the same pattern without the fur. At left is a pink taffeta evening frock, also by Gordon, with a rich wine-velvet standup collar.

Evolves Job Aid Plan for U. S. Women

"Economic inclemency" is the state of the business world, in the opinion of Mrs. Geline MacDonald Bowman, Richmond, Va., president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

"Like a prolonged period of bad weather, it has to come to an end sometime," she says. "Meanwhile, I am not sure but that it is good for business women. Certainly it puts them to their mettle."

In a period of depression, only the best qualified will survive. It is up to the business women of America to prove that they are the best.

Supports Relief Program

Mrs. Bowman is a supporter of various programs for economic relief. Recently she evolved a plan for creating 60,000 hours of paid employment weekly for jobless women.

Chats Skillful Course

Mrs. Bowman is the youngest president the federation ever had, the first to head a business of her own, and the first to have charted a skillful course which gives equal importance to three widely diversified interests—home, business and philanthropy.

She is president, secretary or treasurer of six educational or philanthropical organizations and proprietor of a direct mail advertising business that employs more than thirty people.

She does not allow this variety of outside interests to interfere with direct supervision of her home. She is the mother of twins.

Fall Sleeves Are Puffed Up

Directed By AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—"I do like a pretty sleeve," we heard a woman say as she leafed through a fashion magazine. She'll have plenty to like this fall. Because sleeves are all puffed up with their own importance... they're what you spot first on the new dresses.

Most of them will be wider and looser at the armholes than they were last year. Makes them more graceful, as well as more comfortable when you reach for a strap on the trolley.

You'll still see wide shoulders, making waists look slim. Lots of the new dresses get this effect by extending shoulder and yoke details right into the sleeves. (You can see one of these in the second sketch from the bottom.)

Full Sleeve Favored

See the sleeve next to the top one in the picture? That belongs to Kay Francis, the movie star whose clothes are discussed over bridge tables, at front porch talking bees and over the lunch time sundays.

That sleeve shows you the most important sleeve silhouette for fall... full between the shoulder and the elbow.

The sleeve at the top of the illustration... with the little upside-down caplet... shows you another way to get fullness above the elbow. It's used on a dress worn by Ruth Mannix, another smart movie star.

And there's a neat trick to it. She can wear the sleeve "as is," or unfasten it under those little buttons, slip it off, and have a short-sleeved dress!

Out-of-Way Place Good

This above-the-elbow location is a good out-of-the-way place for fullness on daytime sleeves. It doesn't get in the way of writing or sewing or whatever you do with your hands.

But for formal afternoons, when arms aren't so busy, the fullness often slips down below the elbow. Or sometimes it rises to the very top, and takes the form of triple caplets dropping over the shoulders. Like the one at the bottom of the picture.

Vionnet's loose, three-quarter length sleeve, which got a head start this summer, will be seen on both afternoon and daytime coat dresses.

Then They're Plain

Of course, if a dress has other outstanding details... a draped neckline and scarf, a separate jacket or what not... sleeves modestly retire to plainness. So that the dress won't be too heavy-looking.

For the most part, however, it's the sleeves that will do the decorating. And they'll do things to your figure in the bargain.

If you'd like to know, before you do any fall shopping, just which sleeves do the most for you, send for our bulletin on "What New Sleeves Are Best for My Figure."
