Fur Jacket Plus Wool Dress

Directed by AMOS PARRISH

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Fur jacket time—that's what this is. And topping off one of the gay new wool dresses there's no costume that looks more as though it were made specially for fall outdoors. Crisp. Neat. Easy to stride in.

Here's a little advice on the smart kind of wool dresses to wear with your fur jacket. Simple, first. Sort of sporty looking. Tailored just right . . . but not too severe.

Have it softened by some neck-wear gadget . . . a scarf contrasting in color or material and detachable so it can be changed. Or some crisp lingerie neckwear.

Avoid Mannish Look

Some sort of seaming detail keeps such a dress from looking too mannish. And buttons are a good trimming—in a military line down the center or of the skirt or plaited boldly on the bodice.

Be sure your dress is colorful. Bright green, red or rust are fine. And less bright, but nevertheless cheery, medium dark green, the new modal brown, red and the newest fall idea—gray, usually trimmed with a bright color.

Virginia Bruce of the films has a dress that would go well with a fur jacket.

It's sketched with a fine lingerie collar and the ends. But with this simple, high neck-line she can change to all manner of different scarfs.

Fur Pieces Smart

Depending on the climate and your own cold or warm bloodedness, the best wools for such dresses are sheer wool crepe (lightest in weight), ostrich, rabbit or feather wools—all of which are warmer.

And speaking of fur jackets, we're reminded of the smartness of all these new fur pieces to wear with dresses—the collarettes, plastras, waistcoats, bows, scarfs and muffs.

You've seen them, of course. Probably thinking too, "I want one."

What Fur Pieces to Wear. They're tricky. Some of them look well with one kind of dress and not so well with another.

Our bulletin "What Fur Pieces Are Best for My Costume?" tells what goes with what. Have you sent for your free copy yet?

At Dame Fashion's Feet

Hooking Rugs Is Useful and Fascinating Pastime

BY MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
The hooked rug tells of wifely thrift. Of an art and loving stitches. Discarded cloth brought back to life. A change from rags to riches.

HOOKEING RUGS recently has become quite fashionable. That statement doesn't sound quite respectable, if you are thinking in small boy slang, but it is quite correct, as the rugs are made by the hooking process.

Addicts of this artistic endeavor say that making hooked rugs is the most fascinating of all handicrafts. You can tell an addict by the hungry look that comes to her face at the sight of a jersey dress.

It seems that jersey is the most perfect material for making the rugs and while in the throes of creation she covets every piece of jersey that she sees. And, oh, the lucky woman who finds an old-fashioned suit of red flannel underwear! That is high achievement.

Making hooked rugs is an ancient handicraft that suddenly has been revived, probably because of the need of a floor covering that harmonizes with the simpler types of furniture now in vogue.

Authorities who have delved into the subject, think that the first known hooked rugs or mats were made in Norway. They were called rye rugs, rye meaning turn cloth. They were used as bed coverings and mentioned in wills. The Norse islands of Orkney and Shetland were given to Scotland as part of the dowry of the maid of Norway on her marriage to the son of the Scottish king.

Her shipwrecked on her way to the wedding and she was lost, but the islands remained in Scottish possession. In this way the Norse idea of hooking, called broding, was introduced into Scotland about 1066.

MANY of the Scots were weavers and had short lengths of yarn and cloth about the house. This idea for utilizing these waste bits appealed to the canny Scot immediately. The fireplace was the center of family life and the hearth rug at once became popular.

The hooking was done with an instrument much like the crochet hook, but using yarn or narrow woolen rugs through closely woven cloth.

Quite often the cloth was sacking that had been used to hold food supplies, which accounts for the small size of so many early rugs. The designs were drawn by the maker and suggested objects about the home, such as the cat, the dog and the flower garden.

This rug-making had spread to England and Europe and eventually to the American colonies. It was developed most artistically here, probably because the early Americans had no floor coverings except reed mats and animal skins.

When a ship arrived in America it brought only necessities, as the importing cost made luxuries prohibitive for the average home.

In fact, anything to be really old, must have survived several centuries, but to us "antique" means a hundred years and before, and is beginning to include before the Civil war.

About 1910 collectors began to appreciate the early American arts and crafts and suggested an interest in hooked rugs. Dealers as well as private collectors and those acting for museums began to scour the country for the early rugs. Many fine examples were found in attics and on padding under carpets and other ignoble places, but many still were in use.

ONE of the finest authentic pieces of hooking in existence is the bed covering made for Molly Lathrop by her aunt, Molly Stark, wife of Major John Stark of Revolutionary fame. It is dated 1773 and is made of yarn on a woolen blanket. Her descendants gave it to the Museum of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.

Modern hooked rugs are charming and are most beautiful, durable and valuable when made of woolen materials. They are made commercially in many places, especially in the mountains of the south, and as a hobby by women all over the country.

These lovely rugs lend themselves to home decoration, the more elaborate in the living room and the quaint and simple ones for the bedrooms. When made of father's old dress suit, or the dress sister wore when "he" proposed, or Junior's first long pants, they have a sentimental value also.

Time and use will deepen their beauty, and as they are marvels of durability, they will make a splendid legacy for the next generation.
