

SAFETY FIRST, IS WARNING TO STATE HUNTERS

Watch So-Called Trivial
Injuries, Guard Against Infection, Plea Says.

Safety first is urged upon Indiana hunters in a bulletin issued by the Indiana State Medical Association. The bulletin warns hunters to watch so-called trivial injuries and guard against infection.

"Prevention of accidents calls for horse sense, a rare commodity, as may be seen from the frequent changing of seats in a boat, dragging a gun muzzle foremost over a fence or through the brush or carrying loaded guns in improper positions.

So-called trivial wounds often are ignored. Gun-shot shells contain wadding made of horse hair and therefore wounds made from gun-shot are liable to contain tetanus germs," explains the bulletin.

"Lockjaw may not infest itself until ten or more days, and then treatment is a serious problem. A life may depend on the immediate decision as to whether anti-tetanus serum should be given to prevent development of lockjaw."

"Lacerated wounds, scratches from trees, thorns, wires, should be cleaned and protected by dressings to prevent blood poisoning. Sprains of joints are often more serious than they seem to be, and may call for X-ray pictures to exclude bone injury.

"Care should be used in the choice of drinking water. When in strange country remember that water is not always as innocent as it may seem. If in doubt, be on the safe side and drink only boiled water."

"By taking these simple precautions hunters may be sure of an enjoyable season," the bulletin concludes.

SEAL SALE TO OPEN ON DEC. 1

Dr. Evans' Address Here
Will Start Campaign.

Warning of dire consequences if the public fails adequately to finance the fight against tuberculosis will be given by Dr. William A. Evans of Chicago, noted health authority, at the annual meeting of the Marion County Tuberculosis Association here Dec. 1.

The address will be heard by about 100 civic, religious and fraternal groups now co-operating in the annual Christmas seal sale.

Dr. Stanley Coulter, state campaign director, also will speak.

Address by Dr. Evans will inaugurate the seal campaign, proceeds of which will finance preventive and curative education against ravages of the disease.

With opening of the drive, clergymen of the city will observe "Tuberculosis Sunday" this week-end with addresses on the life saving value of the seal sales.

COUNCIL LIKELY WILL FIGHT GECKLER PLEA

Request for $35,000 Additional Appropriation Opposed.

Request for $35,000 additional appropriation for care of children, who are county wards by order of juvenile court, probably will be opposed by county councilmen at a special meeting Tuesday.

This was predicted today by courthouse budget officials when it was learned that Judge John F. Geckler, who has clashed with councilmen several times over the cost of keeping county wards, would seek the additional appropriations.

The amount is sought for care of children from Oct. 1 to Dec. 31. Geckler ignored action of the council slashing daily cost for each ward from 75 cents to 60 cents, effective Oct. 1. The higher rate has continued since that time.

At its full session, the council appropriated $125,000 for care of county wards, slashing $25,000 from Geckler's total request.

HAIL NEW MATINEE IDOL Lederer Crowds Out Heroes of Old

John Drew

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—Get out the scented sealing-wax and rub the tarnish off the silver frame from which John Barrymore's profile last looked down. A new matinee idol has come to town.

His name is Francis Lederer and he recently has appeared in New York, hailed as a cargo more inflammable than any of the matches that arrive from his native Czechoslovakia.

And when he took a series of bows before the curtains at the premiere of "Autumn Crocus," Broadway critics and audience nodded across one another's arches and said, "This means trouble for the stage-door James."

Young Mr. Lederer, when interviewed, had nothing to fear from the cold, gray light on the wrong side of the footlights. His fine Slav features have something of the intensity of a Barrymore.

Outclasses Old Idols

But neither Barrymore nor Hackett nor Drew, those idols of an earlier day, had such jet black hair, with eyes to match, nor lashes of a length which would be suspected in the other sex.

Mr. Lederer lowered six feet of excellent track material to a chair. Clad in the casual lounging suit he affects during the morning hours and waving the slim hand which never wields a cigarette or pipe, he seemed like a singularly nice young man who was having one hell of a good time every minute of his life.

"I am not married, no, thank God I am not," he said with the curious intensity with which he says everything—with which he would doubtless say, "Make mine a Manhattan" if Mr. Lederer were ever so self-indulgent to say such a thing.

Wants No Domesticity

"Domesticity would kill me—yes, kill me. I want marriage, but somehow, somehow, it must be free from domesticity. I want a woman of a warm, human character. I want to adore and admire her, to feel her inspiration as much as I do that of every other friend I make in my life."

But the search for her, he confessed, is somewhat narrowed by the fact that he hates parties.

"All my life, every day, I want only things that are thrilling and up-to-date," he said. "I can not stand to be bored. I do not want to be satisfied with a tomorrow that is just like today—no matter how much I may have liked today."

Talks To All of Them

Curiously direct and utterly at ease, Mr. Lederer's fluency is rather one of manner than of words. He does not speak much, yet it is said that in London, when the queues of hero-worshipping girls lined up for him to pass, he saw and spoke a word to all of them. Which is a good trick for a matinee idol to carry around the world with him.

South America—colorful travel—the cruise tour extraordinary—down the fascinating West Coast, an ever changing panorama. The beautiful Caribbean Sea. The towering, snow-capped peaks of the Andes. South America has become the adventure of the age—it is the place to see. More than any other continent—it is a land of contrasts, where you will meet the extremes of scenery and civilization. For the American traveler who wishes to escape the cold northern winter climate, there is no finer trip to be had than the South American trip.

"She must be beautiful, the woman I marry," he said. "But it must be a beauty from within—not one that is made up only of clothes and eyes and lips. I see the difference so quick—like this!"

He thumped a table and listened to its timbre, as one might thump a melon for ripeness or ring a coin for lead alloy.

Lederer's first success was made in Berlin, where he played the gigolo in "The Wonder Bar," which starred Al Jolson here. But he refused to come before his American public in such a part as that. It was only when he could appear as a stage lover, with a real dramatic role, that he set his cap for Broadway success.

Likes His Athletics

Lederer lives at the New York Athletic Club, rises early to box, takes a swim and sets out for Central Park, where he canter or walks until he wears of it. The rest of the day is divided between the theater and the gymnasium, which are Eveless Edens for him.

After the evening's performance he avoids parties to stretch out with a good book "on history or geography."

'PIG-HEAD' TRIBE APPEARS MYTH

Expedition Into Brazil Is Fruitless.

By Science Service

BROOKLYN, Nov. 24.—Stories of a "pig-headed" tribe of pigmy white Indians living in the jungles of Brazil have been shaken by the Brooklyn Museum expedition under Desmond Holdridge, which has been working along the Catrimany river toward the primeval Parima area in the Amazon basin.

Although they have been exploring the jungle for months, they have found no Indians matching this Herodotus-like description, nor even so much as a reliable close-up story of them.

Twice the party has pushed its way up the Catrimany, hoping to reach the Parima mountains, but the river, instead of swinging westward as indicated on existing maps, continued straight northward.

Tollsome rapids were encountered, provisions ran low, the native crews became half-mutinious, and as a climax fever threatened Emerson Smith, the camera man; so the expedition returned to base in its cabin cruiser, the Rio-mar. A third expedition is now planned, this time to go up the Rio Demini.

SCHOOL GROUP WILL DISCUSS TAX PROBLEMS

20 Organizations to Be Represented Here at Meeting Saturday.

Representatives of twenty school organizations will meet Saturday afternoon at the Lincoln to discuss feasibility of a state tax to provide the minimum requirements of the public schools, thus removing the burden from local governmental units.

Indiana university research workers have estimated the minimum Indiana schools' requirements at $21,000,000. Creation of a new tax to raise this amount would eliminate state aid for the poorer school districts of the state, and remove much of the property tax for tuition.

Two methods of distribution have been discussed in meetings preliminary to the conference scheduled Saturday. One method involves distribution by the enumeration system and the other, thus far more favored, on the basis of average attendance.

Under the latter system, the number of pupils in a class, twenty-five for instance, would be established. In the case of elementary schools, the minimum teacher wage of $800 a year would be allotted the school unit for each class of major fraction thereof. A wage of about $1,080 would be allotted for high school groups.

Sales, excise and income taxation have been discussed as media for raising the funds. The session Saturday has been called by Robert Hougham, chairman of the executive committee of the Indiana State Teachers' Association.
