Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

The unhappy married are invited to lay their problems before Jane Jordan, who will show them ways and means of mending their life together.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am married and have children, and my husband makes good weekly pay as a general thing. We could live very comfortably and get ahead if he were thrifty, but he is restless and a spendthrift. He pays off his card table bets and bets before coming home. He insists on getting a car and there's generally a bill for gas, oil, tires, or repairs.

After his side of life is looked after, I can take the rest to clothe and feed the kids, pay the insurance, lights, gas, coal, his clothes, lodge, and squeeze out for what furniture is needed. By skimping and saving every penny possible, I have been able to take a course that will enable me to have an income.

Whenever he knows there's an extra dollar, he can find a hundred and one ways of getting his pay spent. Over and over he'll get in card games and lose and lose when he knows there's only one source from which we can live.

So in the face of all this, I feel like he'll let loose altogether and become a regular parasite if he once realizes that there is money coming in elsewhere than his pay. Outside of the money he brings in, he isn't worth his salt, for everything hangs on my shoulders.

Sometimes there is an urge within me to fight through and build my own and the children's future on my own abilities, and then, if things came to a showdown, divorce him. Then I wonder if this is just as he is kind to the kids and they take it for granted that he's a necessity around here.

My husband isn't progressive. He hasn't honest principles or any conception of the finer phases of life, and there's no chance of instilling them into him, as he is close to 40 and far too set in his ways. As it is, I am less appreciated and lower paid than a hired girl.

ANXIOUS TO DO RIGHT.

Dear Anxious to do Right—You and your children will be far safer if you work out your own economic security. It is true that the only way you can make some men stand up straight is to lean on them so hard they have to. But with a man of your husband's type, you can not tell when he will get himself into trouble, or decide that being a family man is too much trouble, and make out. Therefore, the safest bet for yourself and your children is for you to become self-supporting, and let the chips fall where they may.

Dear Jane Jordan—I have gone with a boy steady for almost a year and loved him dearly. He didn't have a job then, or even decent clothes. He has a job now and since he got one has been to see me only twice. I have seen him with a girl who has nice clothes

DOES A COLLEGE EDUCATION PAY IN DOLLARS AND CENTS?

1. The good, high power women do. They resent being treated as women during business hours and on business matters. Some women use sex appeal as a business asset and get away with it. But the really big business women insist on standing on their own.

2. Dr. Everett W. Lord, Boston university, studied the record of 5,000 men age 19 to 72, in all walks of life all over America. He found that men with a grade school education reached their earnings peak, $1,700 annually, at 40 to 44. Partial high school students' earnings peaked at $2,200; high school graduates, $2,800, reached at age 45, held to age 55, then sharp decline. The income of the college graduate reached a peak at age of 64 at $6,000 a year. Education seems to pay handsomely.

3. No, pound for pound, present day woman is not as strong as the present day man, because women today are coddled. In primitive tribes women can stand as much hardship as men. Nature clearly indicates that women are as strong, if not stronger, by giving them the heaviest burden of life—child-bearing.

Women live several months longer than men and longevity is the best measure of strength known.

Hayes Plays Chinese Role in 'The Son-Daughter'

Louis Stockman to Open Free Dancing School for Children Saturday Morning at the Lyric Theater Ballroom.

STRANGE and little-known operations of Chinese tongs in America were turned to dramatic material for the screen adaptation of David Belasco's stage hit, "The Son-Daughter," which is opening Friday at Loew's Palace with Helen Hayes and Ramon Novarro co-starred.

Laid in San Francisco's Chinatown, the history of which is the most colorful of any oriental quarter in the world, with the plot taking place in the exciting period when revolutionists banded in the heart of a city just as they did on battlefields in China, the Belasco play has made possible in its film version many picturesque and authentic details.

How the tongs investigate a sort of private detective agency for their members is seen in the episode in which Lewis Stone obtains inside information about Ramon Novarro in the story, all the characters of which are Chinese.

Miss Hayes, Novarro, Stone, Warner Oland, Ralph Morgan, Louise Closser Hale, H. B. Warner and the rest of the large cast, all appear in Chinese costumes and makeup.

"The Son-Daughter" is a dramatic romance, based on the fictional warfare of 1911 when henchmen killed opposing political leaders. Helen Hayes portrays the role of a young Chinese bride auctioned into marriage. Novarro is seen as a Chinese prince, in America incognito, who falls in love with Miss Hayes. It is one of the greatest romances of all times.

Short subjects comprising the balance of the program will include a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Oddity entitled "The Toy Parade," Hal Roach's "Taxi Boys" in their newest bit, or hilarious "Hot Spot," and the most recent issue of the Hearst Metrophone News.

STOCKMAN TO OPEN DANCING SCHOOL. Louis Stockman, national dance authority and director of the Stockman Dance Studios of this city, has been selected as the director of the newly reorganized RKO children's free dancing school, which is being sponsored by the management of the Lyric theater and ballroom.

These classes will get under way in the Lyric ballroom on Saturday morning, Jan. 7, between 10 and 11 o'clock a. m. Each Saturday morning thereafter throughout the year. Registrations a being held this week.

Parents may register their children at either the Lyric theater or the Stockman studios on Sixteenth street all this week. Registrations also will be held on Saturday morning in the ballroom for those who have been unable to do so during the week.

The usual children's theater admission ticket entitles the child to one hour of free instruction in both ballroom and tap dancing in addition to seeing the first regular morning show of vaudeville and pictures each Saturday morning.

Stockman will, it is said, personally supervise all of these instructions.

Stockman states that the best of the dancers from the kiddies' dancing classes, now being formed, will be given an opportunity to appear on the Lyric stage in the future.

Indianapolis theaters today offer: "Strange Interlude" at the Palace, "Silver Dollar" at the Circle, "Robber's Roost" on the stage and "The Lyric," "The Half Naked Truth" at the Apollo, and "Sally" with Mary Eaton on the stage and "No Man of Her Own" on the screen at the Indiana.

Afternoon Blouses. White or pastel blouses with puff sleeves and soft necklines are being seen worn with black skirts at afternoon affairs or teas. The blouse is usually of satin or an open mesh lace.

They Tell Me — WATSON'S HOAX, WITH BEVERIDGE AS DUPE, BARED

Knifed Rival, Then 'Covered Up' With Senate Farce, Story Reveals.

BY BEN STERN

Visit here of Senator James E. Watson brings forcibly to mind the fact that one of the major political events of 1932 was his defeat.

No one ever has or ever will equal the ability of Sunny Jim in getting himself out of pits dug by his own behavior.

But he fell into one pit from which he couldn't climb when he foisted Raymond S. Springer upon the Republicans as their 1932 nominee for Governor. By that he made his own defeat inevitable.

One salient feature of Jim Watson's career was his ability to kill off any one who threatened his own pre-eminence; and during the thirty-odd years in which he graced Indiana politics, Jim made comebacks after wading waist deep through the muck of various national scandals.

In Bad With Beveridge. One of his most notable successes in holding the limelight occurred in 1922, when Albert Beveridge, distinguished progressive, orator and writer, was defeated for election to the senate by a Democrat, Samuel Ralston.

It is recalled that when in 1922 Beveridge made the primary race for the G. O. P. senatorial nomination, he was opposing the incumbent, Harry S. New, whose lack of outstanding ability served Watson's purpose.

Jim's henchmen went up and down the state in the primary, knifing Beveridge. When, to their surprise, the progressive defeated New, they couldn't cover up in the face of the wrath of the supporters of the victor.

One of the senior senator's representatives here, realizing the importance of patching up a truce, hopped the first train for Washington to see Watson's office, and told him that something had to be done, and speedily, to square himself with Beveridge and his followers.

Frames His Alibi. The story goes that Jim thought a few minutes, and then, grabbing the telephone, called a prominent Southern Democratic senator, who for obvious reasons, was then described as "Senator X."

Watson explained the situation and asked "X" to rise on the floor of the senate and taunt him about the nomination of Beveridge.

Senator X agreed at once and the afternoon session of the senate was staged on the floor of the senate.

The Southerner jeered and jibed Watson in lurid phrases. Simulating wrath and thumping his chest like a kettle-drum in his hand, the orator couldn't restrain his enthusiasm for the manner in which the senator had risen to his defense.

Beveridge probably won't be able to believe the entire affair sincere and impromptu.

The aftermath is history. Watson's supporters, acting on orders, they tell me, deserted and betrayed Beveridge in the fall election and Ralston was the victor.

This story illustrates best of all how Watson managed to survive so long and why he was defeated so decisively a month ago.

Lavish in Praise

Comparing Beveridge's "John Marshall" to the greatest works of literature, Watson placed it beside the Bible. So fulsome was his praise that Jim soon ran out of adjectives and the correspondents of Indiana newspapers ate it all up with a relish, while "X" to complete the comedy, hung his head in shame and contrition.

A few days later, Watson's emissary met Beveridge on the Circle News, the orator couldn't restrain his enthusiasm for the manner in which the senator had risen to his defense.

Beveridge probably won't be able to believe the entire affair sincere and impromptu.

The aftermath is history. Watson's supporters, acting on orders, they tell me, deserted and betrayed Beveridge in the fall election and Ralston was the victor.

This story illustrates best of all how Watson managed to survive so long and why he was defeated so decisively a month ago.

WEDEKING TO QUIT AS ROAD CHAIRMAN

Resignation to Pave Way for Selection of Democrat.

Resignation of Albert J. Wedeking of Dale, Ind., from chairmanship of the state highway commission may be expected some time before the inauguration of Governor-Elect Paul V. McNutt on Monday.

Wedeking announced today at a meeting of the commission.

Wedeking, who is a Republican, said his resignation would be made to the commission at the selection of a Democratic chairman, in advance of the regular reorganization of the commission in April.

Robert Boren of Fountain City, Democratic commissioner, may be named to the chairmanship, although the post may go to the Democrat named to succeed Hugh Barnhart, who resigned last week to become director of the highway department. Arthur Sapp, Huntington, is the other Republican member with Wedeking on the bipartisan board.

The Rhodius Park club will be entertained tonight by Russell Berg, Indianapolis Times cartoonist, and Sam Raborn, "the Texas barytone."

The Brookside Park club has postponed its meeting for tonight until Wednesday night, when the Broadway M. E. church choir will be presented.

Women of the Oak Hill club started the making of comforts Tuesday, in their afternoon sewing meeting. At the next meeting of this kind, they will begin repair work on old clothing, which will be distributed to school children through teachers. On Thursday this club will hear a talk by a health nurse.

Charges of rioting were expected, although mutiny charges were possible because the men did not obey orders of their superior officers to return to their quarters.

The trouble began Monday night, Daniel McDougall, a young member of the second battalion of the fusiliers, and four comrades got into an argument with civilians in a bar. McDougall was struck in the head with a brick, and died in the military hospital.

The next night, some 200 soldiers, enraged by the death of their comrade, marched four abreast down Queen street, through the center of the city, and began attacking citizens.

Windows were broken from automobiles and street cars, bricks and bottles were hurled through window panes of homes and shops, and the entire east end of the city was thrown into turmoil.

JAMAICA RIOT LAID TO TROOPS

By United Press. KINGSTON, Jamaica, Jan. 4.—Soldiers of the Northumberland fusiliers were confined to barracks today, during investigation of rioting in which one soldier was killed, a dozen soldiers and civilians were injured, many homes and shops were damaged, and the eastern section of Kingston was terrorized.

The military had not made public any arrests or charges against the soldiers.

INDIANA JOINS PARADE: VOTES FOR ROOSEVELT!

Electoral College Meets and Formally Casts Its Official Ballot.

The dope bucket was not upset today. Herbert Clark Hoover didn't get an electoral vote from Indiana.

This state's fourteen votes were cast safely for Franklin D. Roosevelt and John Nance Garner, Democratic candidates for President and Vice-President, respectively, today when the electoral college met in the house of representatives.

There was a woeful lack of college spirit, no yells or songs punctuated the short session, and although Frank May Jr., secretary of state, acted as college president, he wore neither cap nor gown.

Thirteen men and one woman formed the college, and the only evidence of any spirit was exhibited by newspaper men assigned to cover the event.

Propaganda Is Futile. The elector wrote in the names of Roosevelt and Garner on formal ballots, signed their names and then the tellers, John W. Spencer of Evansville, elected at-large, and Sol Henoch of Ligonier, Fourth district elector, collected the ballots and counted them.

Despite some insidious propaganda to get at least one vote for Norman Thomas, the Socialist presidential nominee, and the presence of a few staunch supporters of Hoover, all fourteen votes were cast for Roosevelt and Garner.

It was then decided to send the result of the Indiana election to Washington by registered mail.

Sign the Pay Voucher. The only exhibition of exuberance occurred when the electors signed their names to the pay and mileage vouchers.

The whole affair cost the state approximately $500.
