Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Boys and girls, bring your love problems to Jane Jordan who will keep you from making the mistakes of the novice.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am in love with a boy of 18. He is very nice to me and has told me several times that he loves me. We went to the picture the other evening and he had a little to drink and started necking my girl friend. He said he only was having a little fun, and that I am the only one he cares for. Should I say no more about it, or break up with him? We are going steady and I love him dearly.

PERPLEXED. Dear Perplexed—One of the silliest mistakes a girl can make is to assume that she possesses a boy exclusively, just because he pays her some attention. Of course this goes double, but the jealous girl is more helpless than the jealous boy.

It is the boy's privilege to jump up and down and stomp his feet. The more rumpus he raises, the better the girl likes it, because it tickles her vanity.

But when a jealous girl jumps up and down and screams, the male sees her emotion as a menace to his precious freedom. Unless he already is very deeply in love, he runs to cover, and will not come out until the storm is over.

Generally speaking, women love to be possessed, but men resent it. In almost every person's breast there is a desire to "belong" to somebody else. Unless he already is very deeply in love, he runs to cover, and will not come out until the storm is over.

Smart women catch the man unawares by making no premature gestures of possession. Neither do they appear to notice his interest in other women when it is manifested.

By subtle steps they make themselves more and more necessary to the man they wish to capture.

With sympathy, encouragement and neatly turned flattery, they draw him further and farther into their toils.

Before the doomed gentleman realizes what is happening he is tied hand and foot, but by his own desires, not the raucous demands of a jealous woman.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am in love with a fellow who is a nice, good-looking, refined boy, and he says he is in love with me. But several nights ago I was in a theater when he walked in with another girl. As I never have caught him in a lie, it hurt me very deeply when I saw them.

Should I just pass it off as an accident, or should I quit going with him? I have gone with him two years, and I love him deeply and sincerely.

Dear E. B.—Pay no attention to the incident. Even if he is in love with you, why shouldn't he like to take another girl to the theater once in a while? For that matter, why shouldn't you go out with another boy occasionally? Whether a couple is married, engaged, or merely sweethearts, I see no reason for them to live like Siamese twins. If association with others is a menace to love, love is too wishy-washy to last, in any case.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a woman of 22 years. I am a good worker, and I have a daughter 2 years old. I never have been married, and I am in love with the father of my child. He comes around only once a week, to bring the baby's allowance. He doesn't know I still am in love with him. He treats me as nicely as ever, and will do anything I ask of him. What shall I do about it?

UNDECIDED. Dear Undecided—You might try showing your affection for him in little ways to see if he responds to it. When he comes, encourage him to talk about himself and what he is doing. If you can win his confidence, you are well on the way toward winning his heart.

It is almost impossible for a person to avoid loving the one who receives his confidences, day in and day out. If you told a wooden Indian all about yourself every day for weeks, you would find yourself cherishing an affection for the wooden Indian. Try this little trick on the father of your child.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a young man 27 years old. I work all the time and support my mother and father, which I am glad to do. I have found several girls whom I could have liked, but because I could not spend a lot of money on them, they didn't seem to care for me. I don't want any sympathy, but I would like to have a nice girl friend.

LONESOME. Dear Lonesome—You probably are kidding yourself when you say you don't want any sympathy. Why be so adverse to sympathy from the fair sex? Lots of women have fallen head over heels in love with a man for no better reason than that they were sorry for him.

4,000,000 Stitches Placed in Piece by Mother of Owner.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

History students and antique dealers alike will be interested in a beautiful tapestry, hanging in the home of W. E. Reynolds in Speedway City. The tapestry, about fifty years old, was made by Reynolds' mother, Mrs. Singleton Reynolds of Lafayette.

It depicts an interesting part of Scotch-English history, when the Scottish insignia was concealed by the Rev. Mr. Granger, minister of Kinneff, under the pulpit of the church.

Mrs. Reynolds worked more than a year on the piece of tapestry, in which she placed more than 4,000,000 stitches. Before its completion she had sent to every large yarn factory in the United States, to obtain the brown yarn, which predominates in the design.

100 Shades of Brown

It is estimated that there are more than one hundred shades of brown in the tapestry, which is five feet four inches by four feet five inches in size. The tapestry is a reproduction of a small painting about eight by ten inches in size.

The story depicted in the tapestry deals with the time when John Ogilvie, the governor, defended the castle of Dunrobin in Kincardineshire. The castle was the hereditary fortress of the Keiths, Earls of Marischal, and was situated upon a rock, almost separated from the land by a deep ravine on one side, and overhanging the ocean on the other.

In this fortress the Scottish royal regalia had been left, after the Scottish royalists were defeated by Cromwell. The regalia consisted of the crown, scepter and sword of state.

Buried Under Pulpit

The English, desirous of obtaining the regalia, stormed the castle. When Governor Ogilvie saw that the fortress was doomed, he made a last effort, through the aid of the minister of the church at Kinneff, to save the regalia. He spread a report that they had been taken abroad by Sir John Keith, a younger son of the family.

Then Mrs. Granger, the minister's wife, gained permission from the English governor to take some bundles of lint, her private property, from the castle. In the bundles of lint she concealed the precious regalia, and carried them through the English camp.

Arriving at Kinneff, her husband, who had buried them under the pulpit of his church, where they were kept until the restoration.

Following the restoration, Sir John Keith was created Earl of Kintore; Governor Ogilvie was made a baronet and the minister of Kinneff and his wife were rewarded with pensions.

Worked Out Carefully

All of this history is depicted in the tapestry which Mrs. Reynolds finished so many years ago. The scene is the interior of the church, with the walls, floor, benches, stairs, wainscoting embroidered very carefully in different blending shades of brown.

On the wall, in the scene, is a tablet on which the moonlight shines as it comes through the window. The figure of Mrs. Granger is shown holding the scepter, while Mr. Granger is removing the flags from the stone flooring preparing to bury the regalia.

Detail is carefully worked out in the tapestry, which shows rich draperies in crimson, blue and purple, carefully thrown over the objects in the chapel. A Bible is on the reading desk and the pick and shovel with which the minister has been working, lean against the wall.

Everything in the tapestry has been reproduced faithfully, to produce not only a beautiful specimen of fine needlework, but an authentic picture of early history.

Women and Men Agree on Leaders

Select Same Names for Places on List of 'Greatest.'

Masculine minds agree with women's as to the qualities of feminine leadership, it was revealed by an analysis of the 1,000 male votes cast in the nation wide poll, jointly conducted by the National Council of Women and the Ladies' Home Journal, to select twelve great women leaders of the century.

The late Minnie Maddern Fiske is the only leader in the masculine poll who was not also prominent in the official feminine poll in which more than 130,000 votes were cast. She emerges in twenty-second place, displacing Lucretia Mott, who was one of the twenty-four leaders in the official poll.

Schumann-Heink High

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink is the only woman named by the men as one of the leaders of the century whose name does not also appear on the feminine list. The famous contralto was runner-up in the feminine poll, with 32,694 votes and standing the fourth place. In the masculine tabulation she takes twelfth place and Mary Lyon, founder of Mt. Holyoke college, who was one of the twelve great leaders named by the women, drops to fifteenth.

Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross, leads in the masculine poll and Mary Baker Eddy, founder of the Christian Science church, who headed the official poll, takes third place. Jane Addams, who established Hull House and shared the Nobel Peace Prize with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler in 1931, has second place in both polls.

Male Votes Tabulated

Male votes could not be counted officially as the poll was open only to women, but they were tabulated as a gauge of masculine opinion. Miss Lena Madess Phillips, president of the National Council of Women, announces.

The twelve leaders selected by the men, with the number of votes polled by each, was as follows: Clara Barton, 777; Jane Addams, 775; Mary Baker Eddy, 765; Helen Keller, 693; Susan B. Anthony, 642; Frances E. Willard, 620; Harriet Beecher Stowe, 559; Julia Ward Howe, 538; Carrie Chapman Catt, 504; Amelia Earhart, 433; Mary E. Woolley, 321; and Mme. Schumann-Heink, 305.

In a second group of twelve were: Mary Lyon, 270; Evangeline Booth, 233; Louisa M. Alcott, 180; Martha Berry, 177; Ida M. Tarbell, 172; Elizabeth Cady Stanton, 123; Dr. Anna Shaw, 107; Emily Blackwell, 99; Alice Freeman Palmer, 94; Minnie M. Fiske, 75; Mary Pickford, 74; and Abigail Adams, 72.

Nine hundred sixty-two votes were cast by men.
