Supper to Be Held by Y. W. Health Group

A "pot luck" supper for members of all classes in the health education department of the Y. W. C. A. is being arranged by Mrs. Ruth Steinmetz, recently elected president of the council, for 7 on Monday night.

Among new classes offered through the department is advanced ballroom dancing, which opens at 8:15 Wednesday.

The spring term for gymnasium and other dancing classes will open Jan. 23. Announcement is made by Miss Louise E. Noble, health education director, that the swimming pool at Central Y. W. C. A., closed during the holidays for repairs, has been reopened on its regular schedule with the addition of a special "lesson dip" feature at 8 each night, except Thursday.

At this hour free instruction will be given for the price of a regular plunge.

Serving with Mrs. Steinmetz on the health education department council are Mrs. Lora Wood, secretary, and Misses Pearl Leonard, Hilda Flickinger, Elizabeth Miller and Eleanor Kinsing.

Forty-Eight States Are Represented in Painting Exhibit at Art Institute

Shown above is a reproduction of a painting, "Old Bridge on the Brandywine," by Henryette Stadelman Whiteside, an entry in the "American Scene" exhibition at the John Herron Art Institute.

Artists Throughout All of Country Join in Local Showing.

Forty-eight states are represented in the annual exhibition of American paintings at the John Herron Art Institute museum. The exhibition has been arranged to show the spirit underlying the work, which is being produced in various American communities.

The pictures were assembled through co-operation of museums, art organizations, women's clubs and artists throughout the country. Many of the paintings were selected by these organizations as representative of work from their states. Wilbur Peat, director of the institute, describes the exhibit as abounding with interesting contrasts. He says: "In the first place, there is a great variety of subjects, as might be expected of pictures depicting American scenery. There is also a marked difference in the technical methods, ranging from careful, academic work to bold post-cubistic compositions."

Contrast of Viewpoints "Perhaps the most important contrast is that of viewpoints or creative conceptions of the different artists. Some paintings reflect the burly-burly of contemporary life while others take us, in spirit, to more peaceful spots.

"Some echo the ceaseless whirl of our industrial society while others remind us of the stark simplicity found in remote places. The immutability of New England, the romance of the south, and the drama of the west intermingle as they seldom do in our contemporary exhibitions.

"If there is any truth in the statement that traditions, social customs, and physical conditions influence art production, then we should expect to find it illustrated in an exhibition such as this. A sincere painting can not help but be a part of the soil, whether it is done in the prairies or on the coast, and it will convey the spirit of its locality, irrespective of its subject matter."

Gifts Are Accepted A painting by Pierre Auguste Renoir entitled "Jeune Fille au Chapeau" was purchased at the December meeting of the board of directors. The purchase is made from the James E. Roberts Fund.

Gifts accepted recently by the museum are a lithograph, "The Office," by Wayne Adams, gift of the artist; ten pieces of textiles, gift of Mrs. James W. Fesler; one piece of brocade and an originally designed and executed Moro wall hanging of silk, gift of Mrs. George Philip Meier; and a portfolio of 100 reproductions of early engravings, print (engraving and etching), "Chain of Alps" by J. M. W. Turner, and a book, gift of William George Sullivan.

A purchased print, engraved illustration to the "Book of Job" by Blake was bought from the Julius F. Pratt Fund.

The speaker will be the Rev. George Southworth. Committee members for the year are: Membership, Mrs. Albert Gail, chairman; Dr. Fletcher Hodges, Mrs. James P. Wason, Miss Irma Greenham and Mr. Southworth; publicity, F. Posson.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

This is your column; use it! When you're in a jam and don't know which way to turn, write Jane Jordan for common sense advice.

Dear Jane Jordan—I have been married for several years and some of my husband's relatives have not been nice to me. They seem to be jealous. Before we were married, he could do more for his people, and now they seem to resent it because he is taking care of me instead of them. We have done without things we needed to save for a rainy day, whereas they live high, and when a rainy day comes they seem to think we should furnish the umbrella for them.

When they do borrow from us, they do not return anything. For that reason I have put a lock on the pocketbook where they are concerned.

They think me bossy and would like to make husband believe that he is heepeecked, but he understands that if I am willing to save it is for us and not for everybody. They are the kind who like to put their work and responsibilities on some one else.

I want to keep on friendly terms with them for my husband's sake, even though they never consider my feelings in anything. The question is how to cope with people like this. What is your answer? A READER.

Dear Reader—The best way to deal with leaneers is to refuse to give them anything to lean on. When your husband's family learns that it no longer can look to him for a crutch, it will surprise you how quickly they can walk without one.

YOUR CHILD

Choose Your Home to Give Child Play Space, Sunshine

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

WHERE would you live if you had a small family growing up? a young mother asked me. "We have to move."

As her problem had been my own for so many years, I was able to answer her.

"First of all," I said, "it depends on where your husband's work is. I was very fortunate, for after we were married, my own husband's business took us to a lovely small town in Pennsylvania where we lived for years.

"I never thought of an apartment, of course. Even had I lived in a city I never should have considered one for a minute. Neither would my husband have consented.

Take Home in Suburb "In fact, before we left the city to go to our more rural residence, we had taken a small house in a far suburb, country then in fact—and that was where our first child was born.

"It was far from his work, and he worked often through the evening. The last train that stopped at our own station was the 10:45.

"When he missed that, even in winter, he would take the last one, get off three stations above and walk two miles down the icy, and very blizzard-blowing track home. Moreover, many a time he had to cross a long railroad bridge over the river on foot to get that train.

"It shows what fathers will do to give their babies the benefit of country and good air. There were so few automobiles then that hardly anybody had one.

"After we left the city—the country rather—for this new home, we lived in three different houses. Each one was secured only after careful search.

Space Was Important

"We did not go in for all the gadgets and modern conveniences. We sought yard space, trees, airy rooms, and a good neighborhood where our children would have friends we approved of, and where insects would not have to be constantly fought against by us.

"This is a big point. The influence of other children is almost stronger than home influence. It is almost impossible for a mother to combat the things learned from other children whose home life is of low standard and whose parents make no attempt at control or training, either of themselves or their families.

"Another thing we had to avoid was a neighborhood where other children possessed so much more than our own.

"It would have resulted in unhappiness and a struggle on our part to keep down a complex on theirs.

Sun for Children

"To get the right place we secured an old house and painted floors and woodwork ourselves. I wish I had a dollar for every square yard of floor I have finished myself, and even a cent for every foot of door frame and window frame I have whitened with enamel.

"Our children had the sunny rooms. Each house was a bit larger than the one before it.

"We always were near school and church, distances they could safely walk themselves.

She assured me that I had crys-talized her own ideas, and now she would know what to look for.

I hope they may coincide also with those of other mothers who are going to move this spring.

First Meeting of Child Study Club Is Held

The first meeting of the Child Study Club, organized recently by the Parental Society, was addressed today by Dr. Earl Lockhart of Drake university, Dr. Irvin Schultz of the Butler university college of education and Mrs. Ruby Loudonback, in parlor B at the Claypool.

Dr. Lockhart is conducting the lectures for the club, which will include a series of eighteen lessons in a period of two years.

Mrs. Virgil Sly is secretary. Other officers will be elected at the February meeting. The club is composed of thirty members.

A musical program was presented by a string trio and soloist, given Arthur Jordan Conservatory of music. Clara June and Robert Bosson entertained. Readings were given by Miss Kathryn Dalsheimer and the invocation by Dr. John B. Ferguson.

Richard Lieber Will Talk at Session Friday

A guest meeting of the Colonial Dames will be in the form of a tea at 3 Friday in the Propylaeum. Richard Lieber, director of the state conservation department, will give an illustrated talk on state parks.

Hostesses with Mrs. Fletcher Hodges, president, will be Mesdames Arthur V. Brown, Edwin H. Porry, Benjamin D. Hitz and Oscar N. Torian.

Approximately sixty guests will be entertained.

The board of the organization will meet Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Hodges, 3160 North Pennsylvania street.
