Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Bring your love affairs to Jane Jordan, who will guide you with common sense advice.

Dear Jane Jordan—Sadly I sit in my room and wipe the tears from my eyes and try to write the biggest tragedy of my life. A romance of joy, sorrow, and even tragedy has come to an end. A girl for whom I did everything has jilted me and left me an outcast among my friends, whom I gave up for her. A girl who even threatened to take her life because I tried to choose my friends instead of being true to her.

She made all kinds of promises and vows that she would stick through everything and then she never would part. I did things for her that I won't mention, but anyway I was a real pal and sweetheart to her. Then she started her dirt toward me in every way that she could and finally left me.

In my last week with her, I met a girl who is her superior in looks and seems to be a real girl. Each time I am with her, I start thinking of this other girl and my evenings are blue. I'll never forget my former girl. She's on my mind continually.

I have a chance to leave home and perhaps find friends where I'm going. Should I trust this new girl, or go ahead making new friends, trusting that the first girl will come back to me, for no other will take her place in my life. I need your help. I always will intend that it is not always a woman who pays.

LONESOME CROW.

Dear Lonesome Crow—Men have died and worms have eaten them, but not for love! Instead of fearing that you never will trust another girl, watch sharp that some clever little Eve doesn't catch you on the rebound, before you have time to realize what has happened.

A person who has been disappointed in love sometimes builds up a great myth about the undying character of his love. He deceives himself into believing that his love is eternal, because he hasn't the courage to adventure again. He glorifies his former love to avoid the danger of a new attachment.

You must avoid this pitfall with all the energy you possess. All girls aren't gay deceivers, just because one fell short of the mark. A change of scene might be an excellent thing for you at this point. I haven't the slightest idea whether the second girl is worthy or not. Judge her on her own merits and do not let your opinion be colored by your painful experience with the other one.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am almost 18 and very much in love with a boy who is nearly 22. At first my folks thought the sun rose and set in him, and then, as usual, my mother suspected that I liked him and turned against him. Now when he comes after me she won't even speak to him, and she even disapproves of his bringing me home from school.

I try to understand her, since she is so old (63), but it seems like something could be done. I think she is afraid I don't love her any more and care too much for him. I do love him so. He is such a gentleman and takes me to so many nice places.

My father walked in the room one night when he was kissing me, and in no time all sorts of weird tales came from it. You see, I am living in an entirely different age and they just simply can't understand the modern ways, I guess.

I have been lying to my mother and sneaking out to be with him. I've tried to make her see things my way, but she just can't. Perhaps you understand older people better than I do and can tell me what to do. WORRIED.

Dear Worried—Unfortunately your letter states only one side of the case, and this makes it hard for me to look into your parents' motives. You seem to think that your mother dislikes the boy because she is jealous of your love. If this were the case, she wouldn't have liked him in the first place.

She would have been just as jealous of your original attraction toward him as she has seemed to be later. Something happened to change her attitude toward the young man. Search your mind and find out what it is.

It always has been difficult for the older generation to adjust itself to the younger one. I have tried to interpret one to the other, without much success. Youth is headstrong and will have its own way, in spite of parents.

All they get for their warnings is the loss of confidence of the young. Your parents have not succeeded in establishing your respect for their judgment and I can not tell from your letter whether it is your fault or theirs.

Smart for Skating

Chic Costumes All in Black, Great for Sport

(From Fortnum and Mason)

BY JOAN SAVOY
NEA Service Writer

If you're an outdoors girl, skating and skiing costumes this year will intrigue you. For they're built for speed, skill and smartness and have the fine workmanship touch that experts like in their sporting costumes.

For skating, this chic costume is all black, but gets its novelty from a great variety of knitted stitches, some big basket weave stitches, some fine perling, which makes a fine contrast of light and shadow ripple over you as you skim the ice.

The skirt is very circular, flaring from a tight hipline to give you width enough to do the most complicated figure eights. This flaring skirt has the biggest basket weave stitches, the double-pocketed sweater has a finer stitch, as has the yoke of the skirt and the turn-down collar—and the fitted hip portion of the sweater has a very tight ribbed stitch.

WARM knee breeches of the same knitted black are attached to the skirt and the little black rolled cap, which fits firmly on the head, is woven, like the costume, in different stitches.

You can wear gold woolen socks and mittens or gaudy, white and scarlet knitted ones, or green or red ones, as your taste dictates. But nothing is smarter than to preserve the smart somberness of this skating suit by beige pull-on mittens and woolen socks.

Daily Recipe

VEGETABLE
POTPOURRI

1 cup cabbage, chopped
1 cup potatoes, diced
2 cups corn
1 cup tomatoes
1 tablespoon corn starch
2 cups milk, scalded
2 tablespoons cooking oil or butter
1 teaspoon salt

Mix all the vegetables together except the corn and tomatoes. Cover with boiling water and cook until potatoes and cabbage are tender. Add corn and tomatoes. Stir corn starch smooth in a little water and add to scalded milk.

Cook until there is no raw starch taste (about 10 minutes). Add vegetables, oil or butter, and salt.

Yield: Six servings.

Butler Club to Observe Anniversary

Mathematics Group Will Hold Program at Jordan Hall.
