Have a Hobby— Mexican Pottery of Rare Value Found by City Man

MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
There is much to thrill and hold you in the tales of any land. An ancient and ancient romance. Lies 'cross the Rio Grande.

THE collection of Mexican pottery and figurines owned by C. O. Warnock, 2324 Park avenue, is the result of a long and continued interest in Mexican history. After years of reading and studying about our southern neighbor's strange and romantic past, he was curious to see the country itself.

This desire culminated in a trip to Mexico last year, not as a tourist, but with H. C. Carrasco, professor of archeology in the University of Mexico, to excavate ancient ruins. There he helped to uncover some of the pottery he now owns and took moving pictures of the ruins and pyramids.

The Mexican government naturally wishes to keep its historic treasures and the United States cooperates with this desire. So the transfer of Mr. Warnock's pottery was made through the Field Museum of Chicago. To prove its authenticity, and five government records, it was described by Mr. Carrasco as follows: "These pieces were found, the most rough and primitive with black decoration, in Acambaro, state of Guanajuato; the rest, red decorated, near Chupicuaro, state of Michoacan. They were drawn from graves five meters deep, together with human skeletons."

"They belong to the Tarascan civilization in the Othomi zone, the northeast and oldest in the country. Officials of the Museo Nacional consider these specimens very interesting, and the special morphology" (science of structure and form).

AS the potter's wheel was not known in America before the time of Columbus, the symmetry and perfection of Mexican pottery makes it a remarkable example of ceramic art. Many vessels in Mr. Warnock's collection were used in religious ceremonies, and temple pieces are the most highly prized.

The antique pottery can be dated accurately by the depth at which it is found, and as many of the excavations are under heavy coverings of lava, it usually is perfectly preserved. One of Mr. Warnock's rarest bowls, however, is composed of as many pieces as a jigsaw puzzle and its assembling, which he did himself, must have been very interesting.

Some of the vessels are decorated with human faces, many have tripod feet, others fashioned like a shoe are for carrying liquid. The decorations are marvellously true in line and the colors clear and bold.

Mr. Warnock's collection of figurines is considered one of the finest in the United States. He has been told that it surpasses those in the Field Museum and the Museum of Natural History in New York in number and perfection of specimen.

They are tiny figures of pale cream clay, two to five inches high, sometimes touched with color and beautifully made in the style of a gingerbread man. They reflect the details of ancient costumes in earrings, head dresses and necklaces, and were found in the graves of the archaic period (before history).

THEY represent gods and religious ideals, especially the god of fertility, as typified by the female figure. The heads are larger than the bodies, to signify the supremacy of mind over matter, and the features are startlingly semitic. This might seem to substantiate the theory elaborated by F. Fitzgerald Lee in his book, "The Great Migration," that the original Americans were of Jewish origin.

If not Jewish, probably Egyptian, as there is certainly an interesting affinity between the Mayan and Egyptian civilizations. Mr. Warnock says that the present day Mayan resembles the sculpture on the ancient Mayan pyramids and ruins and the figures in the Egyptian hieroglyphs. Undoubtedly the pyramids in his moving pictures look as if they were built on the Sahara.

One of the gratifying contributions of archeology is the progress being made toward piecing together the ancient civilizations of the Americas. The American Association for the Advancement of Science met in Atlantic City last month.

It reported that recent excavations in Oaxaca are expected to produce the key to the oldest recorded civilization in America, the Mayan. The airplane has been of wonderful assistance in modern research and not many years ago the Lindberghs piloted an expedition among Mayan ruins.

THE Tarascan civilization, represented by Mr. Warnock's pottery, is one of the many interesting phases of the development of race culture in America. Unlike all the other tribes, they were not a sad people. Their land was fertile and they did not need to placate the gods, though under Aztec influence they began human sacrifice.

The last aboriginal American civilization ended with the Aztecs, whose ruler, Montezuma, was conquered in 1519 by the Spaniards under Cortez. Their great city, Tenochtitlan, now is Mexico City, and their ceremonial center now is the civic center.

They had marvelous wealth and grandeur, but their religious ceremonies were so full of human sacrifices that no one can regret their passing.

Mr. Warnock has chosen an absorbing subject for study and, since it is in the process of development, will be of continuing interest.

Pick Church for Wedding Here Feb. 4

Mr. Shirley attended Culver military academy and De Pauw university and is a member of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity.

City Mother Is Paid Honor on 85th Birthday

Mrs. John W. Murray, 630 East Thirty-sixth street, was to hold open house this afternoon and evening in honor of the eighty-fifth birthday of her mother, Mrs. Mary Stumph.

The hostess was to be assisted by her daughter, Miss Charlyn Murray; her sister, Mrs. W. A. Workman, and her nieces, Mrs. Milford Dunlap, Mrs. J. W. Drury, Mrs. William Folk and Mrs. Edgar Myer.

Mrs. Fred Myer of Frankfort, another sister, was to be an out-of-town guest.

Pink roses were to be used in decorating the tea table.

Mrs. Stumph has lived here for sixty-five years and is the wife of the late George W. Stumph.

She is invited to confide its doubts and fears in Jane Jordan, who will point the way to a better adjustment.

Dear Jane Jordan: I am a young man in my late teens and just another victim of this thing called depression. My folks are unable to give me money to spend and I have been unable to secure a position so that I can earn some money myself.

I stay at home, day in and day out, reading books after book, trying to get my mind off these sorrowful conditions into which every thing has plunged. If that doesn't help, I get out and walk until I get tired; then I go home and try to sleep.

I want to travel, go to a different climate, and try to establish myself, but it is wholly impossible, as to travel one has to have money. I even have had mad impulses to end it all at moments when I was extremely morose and blue. I am well educated and talented, but despite all, I can't find anything to do.

I am not a coward, afraid to face life and its trials, but I am almost desperate to know what to do to help myself just a little. Mentally, I am miserable. I have many friends, but I do not feel like calling upon them when I am in such deplorable state of mind. There must be some way out. I eagerly seek your advice.

ROLAND.

Dear Roland—Yes, there's a way out, and that is to get a tremendous turn your thought outward upon the universe about you, instead of inward on yourself. Keep in touch with events and cultivate understanding. Then, when your opportunity comes, as it will, you'll be ready to make the most of it.

Dear Jane Jordan—The fellow with whom I am going steady certainly has me puzzled. He is a good boy and comes from fine, well-to-do parents. As he lives in another town, I see him only about once every six weeks. We keep up a steady correspondence, but at times he is neglectful. Recently I heard he was going steady with a girl in his home town, of whom his parents greatly approve, but, of course, he denied it.

The last time I saw him his attitude seemed different toward me, not exactly that of a fellow who loved a girl. In the past he has hinted several times at marriage. Now I am at a loss to analyze his feelings for me. He means more to me than any fellow I've ever gone with. What shall I do? Please help me out.

Puzzled Pat.

Dear Puzzled Pat—A young man's fancy is far from a stable thing. He can shift his affections with the speed of the wind, and it is a constant puzzle to him why girls can not. Propinquity is a great aid to a love affair. Therefore, you are at a disadvantage in living in another town. Don't let this experience discourage you. He isn't the only young man in the world.

Dear Jane Jordan: When a young man goes with a girl and this girl flirts with other men before him, what makes him so jealous or just pride? Could a girl be good if she has wild ways and careless? Do you believe that girls who run together are all alike?

RUDY.

Dear Rudy: I see no difference between jealousy and hurt pride. Sometimes really good girls assume a wild manner, just to attract attention. There is an old saying that birds of a feather flock together, but it isn't always true. I've seen girls of quite different types maintain friendship over a period of years.

Cine-Modes Suit Winter in Filmdom Tricky Costumes Go Big for Cinema Stars

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 16.—It's certainly a suit winter for all the pretty Hollywood stars, at least.

Spending a week-end at Palm Springs and strolling about the El Mirador hotel grounds, Nancy Carroll wore a dressmaker suit of cinnamon brown worsted, with the closest little skirt of a white close ribbed pique, all buttoning slantwise to the left side. Her fringed scarf was a gay orange.

Others of importance seen about Hollywood this past week wearing suits include:

Miriam Hopkins lunching at the Ambassador, wearing an ensemble of blue polished ostrich cloth, a blouse matching her suit in tone, and a cute little hat of the suit's fabric.

Babe Daniels wearing a tweed coat of gray and green checks with checked hat to match, getting ready to go flying with Hubby Ben Lyon.

Eleanor Holm, eating lunch in the First National cafe with Jimmy Cagney, wearing a suit of black-ribbed silk with a tan blouse with turned down collar and a black Windsor tie.

Ann Harding, lunching at the Brown Derby, wearing a green and gray silk tweed outfit with a deep cape collar hanging from a narrow neckband. Her belt and bag were of green suede and her tweed hat had a green suede banding.

Nancy Carroll... likes worsteds.

MRS. CATT IS 74

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, celebrated peace advocate and suffrage worker, was 74 years old when she posed for this birthday picture in her home in New Rochelle, N. Y.

She expressed amazement at the flood of congratulations and good wishes sent to her from all over the world.

Fedoras for Spring

Copied from a man's fedora, the mannish, pinched crown felt hat started women's hats first appeared last fall. But those who wore it found it becoming. For spring it's been modified by flattening down the creases and making it less severe. And it promises to be a fine companion for the tailored spring suit.

Spun Silk Sweaters

New in the sweater entries are those of soft spun silk knit in a lacy stitch. They have a soft, satiny lustre and look most luxurious. Angora and silk are blended to make other openwork lacy looking sweaters.

Organdie on Wool

Mainbocher has put on some of him simple wool dresses organdie collars that roll over and are tied in huge bows. Smart as anything you've ever seen!
