

'Pageant of Brides' to Be Given by Choir of Broadway M. E. Church

Social History of Indianapolis to Be Repeated When Wedding Attire as Far Back as 1858' Is Modeled at Event Here February 1.

Social history of Indianapolis will be repeated Feb. 1, when the wedding attire of brides as far back as 1858 will be modeled in "The Pageant of Brides" to be sponsored by the choir of the Broadway M. E. church in its auditorium.

Amid a background of flowers and to the strains of appropriate music, a 1933 bride will lead the march. With a retinue of flower girls and trainbearers, belles of yesterday will retrace the steps of their eventful wedding days.

Or they may see their daughters and granddaughters sweep down the aisle in the lavish modes of their nuptial day.

The pageant will be a review of fashion too, as the varying styles of seventy-five years will contrast in materials as well as line.

Models Three Generations

Forty or fifty gowns, designed with hoopskirts, trains, bustles, crinolines and more modern appearances, will be reminiscent of courtiers' accomplishments.

The wedding gowns of three generations of one family will be shown. Mrs. John W. Malby, 5337 Park avenue, formerly Bertha Alice Oakes, will model her own, her mother's and her daughter's. Mrs. Roger T. Clarke (Virginia), now a missionary in Africa.

Mrs. Oakes' dress, originally worn seventy-four years ago, is entirely hand made with eleven widths of material in the hoopskirt. It is made of a material called Bayadere stripe.

To Wear Own Dress

The original accessories and jewelry, worn at the wedding of Mrs. W. O. Dunlavy's mother sixty-two years ago, also will be displayed. With it will be carried Mrs. Dunlavy's grandmother's tiny hymn book, ninety years old.

Mrs. E. E. Padgett, 3648 North Delaware street will appear in her own wedding dress of 1905. It is of heavy white satin with long sweeping train, fashioned with gold-spangled lace and shirring. Her veil is of white chiffon of train length, and she will wear the original white kid wedding slippers.

The ivory satin, princess style gown of Mrs. M. L. Budd, wed in 1893, will be modeled. Mrs. Budd is the mother of Mrs. Richard M. Millard, wife of the church pastor. Its long train will be carried by trainbearers.

Mrs. Hulick chairman

Another gown of brown satin, worn sixty years ago by the mother of Mrs. W. H. Tennyson, 5452 North Pennsylvania street, will contrast with the conventional white.

The affair is being arranged by Mrs. Fay Hulick, chairman; Miss Ruth Rines, ticket chairman, and Mrs. Harry A. McNeely, publicity.

A quartet from the choir will provide music. It is composed of Mrs. Hulick, soprano; Mrs. Carl Moore, contralto; Mr. Moore, tenor, and Robert Lewis, baritone.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Have you been disappointed in love? Write to Jane Jordan for advice and read your answer in this column.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am broken hearted for the first time. The life of my life has occurred. A young man jilted me for another girl, and left me to endure the slams and slurs of his friends. He was a man who represented everything fine and ideal, a demi-god and a man who will forget me more easily than I can forget him.

He taught me to care and gave me a new slant on life. I was sure I could bank my very life on him. His friends told me he was laughing at me behind my back, but I did not believe it.

I am unhappy, and forgetting for me means giving up the ideals I had. It means giving up the sacred promises and breaking a great promise. I hope when I have gone on in time he will look back and realize the heartache I endured for his sake.

I have an opportunity to go with a splendid young man who cares for me tremendously. He is not my ideal, but I have to snap out of this mood, so why not?

STARR.

Dear Starr—It seems to me that the young man was far from ideal, and behaved like anything but a demi-god. You endowed him with qualities which he did not possess. No doubt his exterior was very attractive, but his inner reactions were not so good.

Perhaps you have the reverse situation in the second young man. It may be that he lacks glamour, but now that you know the ephemeral quality of glamour, you will be more able to appreciate character.

Everyone who has been disappointed in love has a struggle to avoid the temptation of feeling sorry for himself. The poor quivering age tends to dwell overmuch on its own wounds, and to indulge a childlike hope that the cruel lover will live to be sorry and pity one as much as one pities oneself.

This is a great waste of time, Starr, because it is negative. Guide your energies into more positive channels. Use your new slant on life to enchant the next man.

Dear Jane Jordan—I've just finished reading Gin Elyne's letter. Personally, I think she is much to vain to be attractive. Perhaps some day she will realize that vanity is poison to happiness. It happens to be after a musical career myself, but I realize that it will take more than my lonely presence and good looks to make my public like me.

If Gin Elyne got out and tried to get a few auditions, she would learn that a career isn't the bed of roses it is painted, and that it takes work, tact, patience and personality. One can not marry and expect to have much of a career nowadays. You have to devote most of your time to either one or the other to make a go of either.

JUST MAG.

Dear Just Mag—The thing I like about Gin Elyne is her refreshing honesty. Most people neglect to mention their faults. An inflated ego never is popular, but a certain amount of vanity is essential for survival. We usually dignify it by the term "self-confidence."

You simply have to believe you're pretty good to achieve any kind of success. In a competitive society, self-honesty also seems necessary. I only hope Gin Elyne will not carry it to such extremes that she will not be loved by other people.

Some careers can be combined with marriage very successfully. When a woman has separate interests of her own, it should make her more interesting to her husband. Domesticity calls when the wife has no subject of conversation except her housekeeping.

There was a time when a woman had no other career open to her than marriage. Her success depended upon what she could get out of some man. Now many avenues of self-expression are open to her, and she does not have to relinquish love and marriage to follow them.

Dear "Still Love Him So"—I am sorry you do not want your letter published, as the answer without the problem is meaningless to people in the same situation who might derive good from the answer. It will profit you to have nothing for you to do his school work for him.

If you can stimulate his interest in doing it himself, you will have done him a favor. I think it would be inadvisable for you to pursue him with your offers of help as he is sure to misinterpret your intentions.

If you have a suitable opportunity to invite him to your home, I see nothing against it.

TORCH CLUB WILL GIVE LAST PARTY

U. S. Needs Economists' Advice, Says Ruth Bryan Owen

Famed Daughter of Commoner Feels Public Is Too Harsh in Judging Her House Colleagues

BY WILLIAM ENGLE Times Staff Writer NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, daughter of the Commoner, sat in Fannie Hurst's early Italian drawing room today and talked of late political trends of 1933.

At first it seemed a little incongruous—crime prevention, unemployment, 3.05 beer popping up there in the old world cloister. But not long.

For the lady politician from Florida, the woman who insiders say is potentially the next secretary of the interior, is a personality so vivid that surroundings do not matter.

Her vote on the beer bill—for it brought her to a definition of her whole conception of the logical relations between an electorate and its representatives. In a low, animated voice, she made it clear.

Calls Duty Obvious.

"If the public has the pertinent facts on a question and has made up its mind," she said, "and if it has expressed its mind, the representatives duty, I think, is obvious. He is living in a democracy. He is obligated to carry out the public's will."

"But here's the other side. If the public isn't familiar with a question, if it hasn't made its stand plain, it seems to me it's the representative's duty to go ahead on his own judgment."

The house of representatives, she conceded, is hardly the perfect legislative body. But she does not like to see the whole caboodle tarred with the same stick.

Statement Too Broad

"There's been a vogue of iconoclastic literature lately against congressmen," she recalled. "Just at a time, too, when people shouldn't have new perplexities and anxieties added to their old ones. They've been told their governing body is trivial-minded, un dependable."

She thinks that is too broad a statement.

"Every way you turn, you hear captious talk about congressmen. Now in normal times probably there's no harm in having some fun at their expense."

"But when truth's twisted now, and when the distortion hurts officials, I call that a disservice to the country."

Has No Panacea

"I haven't any panacea for everything that ails us. I wish I did. I do think Uncle Sam oughtn't to be confused with Santa Claus."

"But what to do about unemployment, about the starving, is something that's perplexing us all."

"I think we need the advice of economists now more than anything. Experts. When my car balks, I go to a garage. When I'm ill, I go to a doctor. Why shouldn't economists be consulted in economic troubles?"

Her pet bill, she said, is one providing for federal acceptance of the Everglades National park. It is fifty miles wide and sixty miles long, she said, and a fairland.

Interests Are Diversified

Her legislative interests, however, are pretty widely diversified. She is all for the new psychology in penology; crime prevention absorbs her; she is so eager to have the younger generation become good citizens that for years she has promoted movements in Florida to intensify civic consciousness in high school and college.

"And don't forget I'm a mother and a grandmother."

The children and grandchildren provide most of her recreation, she said. She dances, drives and swims with them. Also, she confided hesitantly, she reads detective stories.

"I suppose it's all right to admit it. Mr. Wilson made it reputable."

Relief Agencies' Diet Shown Far Below One Urged by U. S.

BY RUTH FINNEY Times Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Two food budgets intended for a family of five for a week have been laid before congress, together with the necessity of deciding which shall be adopted for Americans within the next few months.

The first is a food list prepared by the children's bureau of the department of labor. It is labeled "A restricted diet for emergency use only" and it is accompanied with a warning that health can not be maintained for long on these amounts.

The second is a diet actually being given families in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, by relief agencies. It is far below the restricted, emergency standards specified by the children's bureau. The amount spent for this Fayette county diet, $197 a week, is higher than allowances in some other parts of the country.

The children's bureau specifies that a family of five should have not less than fourteen quarts of milk for a week. The Fayette county diet allows four cans of milk.

Instead of three pounds of sugar and a pint of molasses, it gives 2 1/2 pounds of sugar and a package of molasses. It gives no butter, though the children's bureau specifies half a pound.

It gives one pound of lard and three pounds of salt; where the bureau specifies three; two cans of tomatoes instead of three; four pounds of cabbage instead of five; fifteen pounds of potatoes instead of ten; three pounds of other vegetables instead of eight; three pounds of cereals where three are specified; four pounds of dried peas or beans when three are specified.

The Fayette county diet includes no cod liver oil for children, though the children's bureau says two teaspoonfuls a day are necessary for each child and three or four teaspoonfuls should be given if possible.

"Make every effort to increase the amounts of milk, vegetables, fruits, and if there are young children, cod liver oil," says the bureau. "In all relief, the food budget should provide a diet adequate to maintain health and growth over an indefinite period of time."

It submits an adequate diet list, with amounts much larger than those in the emergency list.

The question of food for American families comes before congress with the Costigan-La Follette relief bill. With federal hunger loans already being granted through the F. C. C. the sub-minimum diet outlined is being given in many parts of the country. The pending bill proposes a $500,000,000 direct grant for relief.
