Remy Is Speaker

William H. Remy addressed the assembly of Park school this morning on "The Importance of Laws in a Complex Society."

Daily Recipe FRENCH PANCAKES

Sift two cups flour with a quarter teaspoon of salt, then mix in unbeaten eggs. Add enough milk to make a thin batter, about two cups, stirring it in a little at a time. Strain the mixture and flavor with a spoon of grated orange rind.

Butter a small frying pan and cook the cakes in that. They should be very thin. After the pancakes are brown on both sides spread them with currant jelly, roll them and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve as dessert.

White Dining Room Is Newest Type

American Maple Furniture Gives Added Touch of Beauty

With white walls and rubbed maple woodwork, a rag rug and maple furniture in early American design, this dining room is an example of consistent arrangement.

BY JULIA BLANSHARD

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Now that families are reunited in homes, whether they are there from choice or just because they can't afford to go places and see things, is immaterial.

The thing to do is to make the home so attractive that the habit will last.

Dining rooms have increased importance this year. There is something magic in the charm of a home-cooked meal served in pleasant surroundings that makes such hospitality remembered long.

White dining rooms are the newest kind you can have. Chaste, white walls, white curtains, white woodwork, or polished pins, and pure white table linen is considered smart once more.

Against this background you can let your love of color run riot in your drapes, your rugs, your chairs and table decorations. And the ensemble gives you a certain restful beauty that highly colored walls never achieved.

Combined with white walls, no furniture is more appropriate and as inexpensive as American maple. In an eight-room house of colonial influence, on exhibition, all the rooms are finished in maple and all the furniture is maple. Surprisingly inexpensive and absolutely charming reproductions of historic pieces have been made.

Smart With White Walls

The dining room is particularly smart in its white walls, maple woodwork, and its early American furniture.

Along one side is a large sideboard of very early type. A high cupboard arrangement with three drawers is copied from the upper part of an old water bench. The butterfly table, a copy of an original dating about 1700 now in the Wadsworth Athenaeum, can be closed to make a breakfast table.

The chairs are reproductions of early American ones, made of maple, too. The entire center of the room is covered with a handsome round rag rug, of rose and rich blues and yellow, with a handsome black border.

Overdrapes Are Ruffled

The ruffled window curtains have overdrapes that also are ruffled, made of a reproduction of early American hangings, in cretione of the same colors as the rug.

For this room, the old-fashioned style of using fruit pictures is revived. Over the sideboard there is a vivid still life of fruit and flowers, and smaller fruit pictures, all framed in black with white mats, hang about the room.

Two old-fashioned glass lamps are electrified for the top of the sideboard.

If you are interested in doing your dining room over in white walls, you can get stunning results in the use of plain colors for the rugs and window drapes, instead of figured.

A medium blue, used with white borders for the drapes, with a tiny gold line between the white and the blue, are most effective. Your rug could be the same blue. Green makes a nice foil for white walls, too.

Rushes to Be Feted by Delta Zetas

Traditional Rose Dinner Be Given at Chapter House Tonight.

Mrs. John R. Sentney, national president, will preside.

YOUR CHILD

Daddy Must Make Sacrifice So Tot Can Get His Sleep

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

IT is best for very little children to go to bed early—before dinner, unless you are so situated that noon dinner suits best, and the lighter evening meal is at 5 or 5:30, as happens in many country districts.

By right here arises a big problem. When is daddy to see his children if not after he comes home from work? He goes away in the morning usually without time to do more than kiss them a hurried goodbye.

If he lives near his work, he may be home for a few minutes at noon, of course, but most fathers, especially in large cities, never see their children until evening.

The older children he may see, and even have time for a story or a romp with them before bedtime.

Stranger to Tot

It is the child under 5 that he may be a stranger to if the proper routine of sleep is adhered to. And to put a child of this age to bed at 8 o'clock is proper. After he is 5, a little boy or girl should be in bed by 7 or not later than 7:30.

I believe it is due to this problem about fathers that so many mothers do not approve of the early bed time. And who can blame them? They want their little children to know and love their daddies.

Besides, if dad comes home night after night and finds the baby in bed he is likely to raise a rumpus and declare that this idea of putting kids to sleep at such an hour is all tomfoolery and nonsense.

Child Needs Sleep

It is right and human that a man should know his children when they are little. He loves them as much as their mother does.

But there is one thing to remember. The things that are best for a child (and close to thirteen hours sleep at night is one of them) seem almost invariably to call for sacrifice on the part of one parent or the other, or both.

Moreover, a child's memory when he is older usually does not cover this early period. When he is old enough to stay up a little later, this is the time when real memory begins.

His father has plenty of time to become his beloved hero and friend. Besides, there are Sundays, too, and perhaps Saturday afternoons if he is working. These hard times, like all other ill-winds, have their good points.

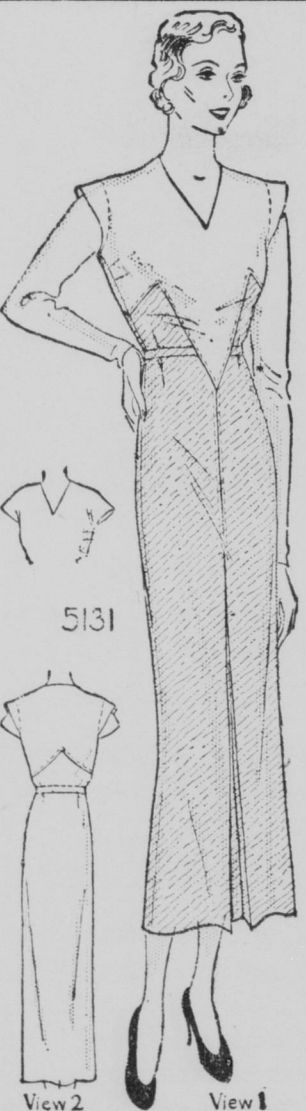

Men are seeing more of their families, even if the hours so spent are full of worry and heartaches.

Temptations at Table

If the family rises late, of course, a young child being thus assured of his full quota of sleep, can be put to bed a little later.

But this brings complications. He wants to be at the table with the family where he sees pork and beans or potatoes cooked with cheese, rich gravies, perhaps pie or cake.

This is only guessing, but we all

Walker, and Miss Lucile Rice of Spencer was wed to Herman Stewart. The ceremony was read by the Rev. Aubrey H. Moore, pastor of the Seventh Christian church, at the home of the couples, 974 Eugene street.

Mrs. Davis entertained with a dinner following the ceremony. She was assisted by Mrs. Harry Rice, Mrs. Walter Harmon and Mrs. Harry F. Hobart.

Collar 'Makes' Costume

The galky collar which turns down the front of the thin woolen jacket and skirt styled above is one of this spring's novel devices for formalizing a strictly tailored ensemble. The slight puff of the sleeve just above the elbow offsets the masculine link-button cuff.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Tell your story to Jane Jordan for an impartial opinion. Your questions will be answered in this column. Write your letter now!

Dear Jane Jordan—Six years ago, after four years of marriage, I was disillusioned greatly concerning men, including my husband. I tried everything in my power to make things right, and finally got a divorce so that my husband could marry the woman he wanted.

The most consoling remark to me at the time was that it evidently had to happen for some reason that I probably would know in the future.

About a year after this I met a man in whom I was quite interested from the beginning. He was very frank in telling me about his marriage and why he was so terribly unhappy and dissatisfied. He told me many times that he would be divorced if it were not for his children. I am very familiar with the married man's story of not being understood, but this is different.

During the last five years I have been with him many times. I understand why he is so unhappy, and I positively know that if I decided never to see him again that it would not make things any better, and that he probably would seek some other woman's company for diversion.

He says that he knows positively that his liking for me is not a matter of infatuation, as it never would have lasted over such a period of time. It seems to me as if I must adore this man, as time does not seem to take him far away from me. What I want to know is this: Do you think I am doing a great wrong?

ONCE A WIFE

Dear Once a Wife—That depends on what you mean by wrong. If you mean do I think you are a woman whose sins are as scarlet, the answer is no. If you mean do I think you are ordering your life in an ill-advised manner, the answer is yes.

Sophisticates, like Mr. Mencken, may contend that a woman rather would have a half interest, or even a fifth, in a real man than own the whole of a fool, but I believe that women love too possessively to be content in sharing the man whom they love with another woman.

I am not sure that your lover is doing his children any good by living with their mother when he is definitely unhappy in such arrangement. Children are not benefited by union of parents who live together for duty's sake. If he had more courage, he would make the break and insist upon a more intelligent solution of his problems.

Married men, as a rule, are not willing to pay a high price for their love affairs. If there is to be anything in the way of an outside affair, it must not cost too much. Few women are willing to subsidize on half rations all their lives, and I suspect that you are no exception to this generalization.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am 21 years of age and have been going
