Cantor Is a Comedy Treat in 'The Kid From Spain'

Never Has Noted Comedian Been Surrounded With Such Beautiful Girls as He Is in This Photoplay.

BY WALTER D. HICKMAN

EDDIE CANTOR certainly hits the amusement bulge in a merry musical movie, called "The Kid From Spain." When fact demands a suppliance, I am going to use it and am going on record stating that this, to my way of thinking, is the funniest movie that Cantor has given the screen.

There are many reasons causing me to tell you this, but Cantor is so seriously funny when he is "fighting," chasing and being chased by a bull in a great arena that I list this scene among the ten funniest the screen has yet produced.

Eddie as a bogus Spanish bull-fighter believes when he enters the arena to fight the bull that the animal is a trick bull that will take orders, but the bull that the villain puts into the arena is no trick animal. He is in dead earnest. Just how this scene was "shot," I don't know, but I do know that audiences are yelling their heads off at Cantor's serious antics. When the bull jumps fences and starts a cock's tour after Eddie—well, the picture has reached its funniest moment.

It is not necessary for me to go into detail regarding the story, but to tell you that it gets started in a girl's dormitory in a very modern co-ed school. And speaking of dormitories, the one in "The Kid From Spain" is the last word. Cantor, while asleep, is carried into the girls' dormitory and he is rudely awakened in the morning by the girls getting up and taking their splash.

This bathing scene is a sensation because the girls are the most beautiful that Cantor has ever had with him in any movie. Watch the splendid dance formations of the girls in this swimming dance number in the pool. Here is the last word in splendor, and I thought again of Ziegfeld and the way he glorified beautiful girls. This picture puts the girls in a Tiffany setting.

The best song number of several good ones is "Look What You've Done to Me" and it is put over with a comedy musical bang by Cantor and Lydia Roberti, a raving beauty.

Also watch the way Eddie goes blackface in the cabaret scene. And this scene is filled with melodies that make you tap out the rhythm with your foot.

The cast includes Robert Young, Ruth Hall, John Miljan, the living Sidney Franklin, Noah Beery and so many others.

To my way of thinking, this is the best movie that Cantor has given us. No wonder they are raving over this one from coast to coast.

New at the Palace.

"The Bitter Tea of General Yen," is another story written on the ancient plot of east meeting west, with the inevitable result.

The picture gives Nils Asther, who has had hard luck since the inception of the "talkies," a chance to show his wares.

Asther is the best of the cast. His marvelous voice is a great aid in the portrayal of the bland General Yen. His English, however, is still hard to understand. Asther has a smoothness and a polish which makes him captivate in spite of the unpleasantness of some of his scenes.

Barbara Stanwyck as Megan Davis, a would-be missionary, is not up to her usual standard. She is too inconsistent in emotional expression as well as action to be successful. The time has passed when an actress could depend alone upon physical beauty. She fills in the part and that is about all.

Walter Connolly as Jones, financial advisor to General Yen, is good. He is pleasant "American" relief in a whirling mob of heathen. The character of the out and out business man even in such a catastrophic business as war, is made very humorous by this newcomer to the screen. Some of his speeches carry the important thread of the action and he does routine speaking well.

For those who will make themselves accessible, there is some good philosophy concerning missions. It's not one-sided either.

The scenes of the Chinese civil war are powerful and well-handled. But coming as it does, along with so many other Oriental pictures, I don't think you will rave over this

The play will be under direction of Clarence M. Ledwith. Miss Betty Wolfe will present a number of readings and the choir will sing.

"Hoosier Fiddlers," "The Whiff of Do," "Noble," and "Ralph Green," will play. "Vidal and his Chevaliers" will furnish music for dancing.

my is pretty poor theater and that is due to what I think was careless cutting and assembling of the scenes. The continuity is mighty bad. The idea of the story of a mummy (Karloff) coming to life at the present day and then walking the earth to discover his sweet heart of centuries ago, only to find her spirit in a modern English girl, has the attributes of entertaining theater, but it has not been worked out in the movie. Really, when I saw this picture I had the feeling that the reels had all been mixed up by mistake. But that was not the case.

Must give credit to Karloff's mummy makeup. That is a masterpiece, but I have to stop all of my praise there. The cast includes David Manners, Arthur Byron and Zita Johann.

Now at the Apollo. And be your own judge as usual.
