

AUDITORIUM IS LARGE FACTOR IN SCHOOL LIFE

Each Pupil at No. 16 Is Daily Participant in Programs.

The auditorium in School 16, at 1402 West Market street, offers each pupil an opportunity either to be a spectator or principal in daily programs.

The auditorium serves three important functions in the school. It is utilized as a clearing house for all announcements, the other two would have to be given in each room.

In use as a social center, the auditorium enables teachers, through dramatization, to stimulate the pupil so he will see value in what he is doing and will willingly put forth his best efforts.

Stage Fright Is Erased

The auditorium also aids pupils to correct emotional disturbances. The fact that every child has an opportunity to stand before the group as often as possible to speak or read or do the thing he can do best, erases stage fright, teachers say.

The training pupils receive as a part of the audience also gives balance to emotional reactions, teachers declare.

Last Friday, sixth grade pupils presented "The Angelus," a playlet developed from the famous painting by Jean Francois Millet, "The peasant painter of France."

Write About Peasants

Picture study was made in the art class and during English classes the pupils wrote compositions about peasants in France, the picture and the artist. Best parts were chosen and combined for the program.

Two pupils were selected and posed in costume before the auditorium audience as peasants with the surroundings as Millet portrayed them.

A part of Millet's boyhood was dramatized and a scene in the Louvre, where the picture now hangs, was enacted.

A BOOK A DAY

BY BRUCE CATTON

ONE of the unfortunate things about current literature is the fact that so many writers combine a fine, poetic sensitiveness with a distressing inability to master the mechanics of their craft.

Thus we get novels brimming with genuine feeling and insight, but spoiled by poor plot construction and faulty character-drawing; novels basically worth more than some of the most glib and polished best sellers, but woefully lacking in the elements which carry the sense of reality.

An example of this is "One Against the Earth," by Daniel Mainwaring.

This is a story about a somewhat reckless lad who grows up in a little town in California. He is torn by two impulses—the desire to rove far off, see life in its aspects, and taste experience in all its forms, and the deep necessity to anchor himself close to the earth.

These rival impulses are described with fine care. The way in which the lad is driven by this conflict to destroy his own life and bring misery into the lives of others is sympathetically explained. There is poetry and beauty in the author's handling of it.

But the book as a whole falls flat. Characters, dialog and incident become unreal. After a good start, the book fails to convince the reader. It should have been excellent—and, somehow, it isn't.

Published by Long & Smith, the book is priced at $2.

Learns Quickly Can't Fool This Bright Pupil on Formula for Water.

A FRESHMAN pupil of Crispus Attucks high school, during his fourth science class, was caught unawares when his science teacher asked for the formula for water.

After a few stutters and stammers, the pupil confessed he did not know the answer.

The teacher then told him that the formula was "H-2-O," and that she would return to him later and expected to get the correct answer.

The class studies went on and an hour later the same teacher asked the same freshman for the formula for water.

The freshman answered, "I-I-K-K-L-M-N-O."

It was the teacher's turn to be amazed then and she asked him to explain.

"Well, you said 'H to O,' and that's what it is," he said.

RARE STAMP ERRORS TO BE ON DISPLAY

Collection to Be Discussed by Owner, Dr. Goethe Link.

A collection of United States stamps in which printing errors have been made will be exhibited and discussed by the owner, Dr. Goethe Link, at 8 Friday night, in the Lockerie. The exhibit will be made for the Indiana Stamp Club.

The most recent error of this kind, according to local stamp authorities, is on the 1913 24-cent air mail stamp, which was printed in two colors. The paper was inverted upon the second printing, making the centers inverted. These stamps, because they are so rare, are sold at $3,000 or $4,000. Local collectors do not know of any owned by Indianapolis people.
