

New Issue of Stamps to Honor James Oglethorpe, Georgia's Founder-Savior

Friend of Poor Debtors to Receive Tribute
Feb. 13.

BY MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
ON Feb. 13, Georgia will begin a bi-centennial celebration that will continue until Thanksgiving. To inaugurate fittingly this commemoration, the United States post office will issue a 3-cent purple stamp, carrying the likeness of General James Edward Oglethorpe, founder of the first permanent settlement in Georgia.

There has been quite a bit of sarcastic criticism of the numerous commemorative issues of stamps, but certainly General Oglethorpe and the colony in Georgia deserve a memorial.

In 1794, when urging the erection of a monument to General Oglethorpe, an impassioned Georgian orator, with typical southern extravagance of speech, said: "The deliverance of Georgia from the Spaniards is such that it may not be paralleled except by some instances out of the Old Testament. In annals of the English speaking race, there is none more deserving of imperishable monument than James Edward Oglethorpe."

Founding and maintaining a colony in Georgia was a feat of military skill. Oglethorpe demonstrated his strategic ability when his small army of 600 almost annihilated a Spanish force of 5,000. Nevertheless, the benevolent impulse behind the colonization was of greater importance.

The suffering occasioned by the cruel practice of imprisoning for debt was opposed bitterly by Oglethorpe, who persuaded parliament to pass a bill improving prison conditions and freeing many of the debtors.

As these people found difficulty in reinstituting themselves in society and finding work, Oglethorpe offered to take them to Georgia to found a colony.

THE hostile Spaniards in Florida had made colonization in Georgia unsuccessful. Therefore, the English king was delighted to have a man of Oglethorpe's military attainments, willing to undertake such venture. In 1733, forty debtors and their families came to America under his leadership, and settled on a high plateau, which now is the site of Savannah. Later, speaking of persecuted German Moravians found refuge with them, as did John Wesley, destined to be the great Methodist leader.

The claim that Oglethorpe's defeat of the Spaniards preserved America to the English speaking people seems a bit extravagant. In reality, twelve of the thirteen original colonies were flourishing before Oglethorpe established his settlement, in spite of the fact that St. Augustine was and had been under Spanish rule for 168 years.

Rather, his great claim to fame lies in his work for humanity. A contemporary said of him, "Every humane and noble cause exercises his heart and head. He is one of the most ennobling characters of whom the annals of the time give an account. Pope wrote of him—One driven by strong benevolence of soul, Shall fly like Oglethorpe from pole to pole."

SEVERAL poems were written to him by famous men, for it was considered the elegant gesture of that day to dash off a verse at the slightest provocation. Aside from his philanthropic and military exploits, "the noble veteran ever was a favorite with the ladies" which seems to complete a perfect character.

For the United States to immortalize a man of such caliber is logical and timely. It may be that more boys and girls will remember the story of the founding of Georgia from the discussion and study occasioned by this stamp than from their textbooks.

The government bulletin concerning the issue does not specify which portrait will be used. It merely states, "The central subject of the stamp is a likeness of General Oglethorpe, wearing a coat of armor."

The accompanying portrait, in armor, may be used, but the Detroit News reports that a painting of Oglethorpe recently was discovered in London and purchased for the art department of Oglethorpe university. As it is supposed to be the only contemporary portrait, possibly it was the one selected.

According to the bulletin, "The stamps will be placed on sale at Savannah on Feb. 13. Stamp collectors desiring first day cancellations may send a limited number of addressed covers, not to exceed a total of twenty-five to the postmaster, Savannah, Ga., with the cash or postal order to cover exactly the value of the stamps required."

CORDELL HULL LONG Foe OF HIGH TARIFFS

Probable State Secretary Concentrates Life on Economic Subjects.

federal estate and inheritance tax laws also of 1916.

From his earliest days Cordell Hull never has taken a leading part in rough and tumble debate of congress.

He is no orator, his gestures are rather more awkward than not, his voice harsh. But both houses pay attention to his addresses.

He seldom has burst on to the front pages; he never has thrown an ink well or raised a cane in a prohibition fight, although at the last Chicago Democratic convention he decisively was beaten in the liquor plank row by Al Smith, and an immense majority of the delegates.

Some Call Him Dreamer

He hasn't figured in a sensational patronage fight; nor, for that matter, are there familiar laws bearing his name.

Not a few of his colleagues regard him as a legislative dreamer—dreaming and talking consistently and convincingly about the tariff and taxes that he wants readjusted along Democratic, and what he thinks are sensible, lines.

He is known as a conservative—a quiet and pleasant, friendly man who has centered his attention on fiscal matters.

Hull served from 1921 to 1924 as chairman of the Democratic national committee; he raised money for his party, and he managed that riotous 1924 convention in Madison Square Garden.

Since he came to the senate, Senator Hull has been hammering away at the tariff problem.

He's Tennessee's Hero

While other Democrats fought for tax-tariffs on oil and lumber, and copper and coal in the last revenue bill, Hull unleashed his condemnation of the vote trading that put these imposters in the law.

He has devoted long addresses to world economic conditions and the effect of tariffs in the present world economic conditions. He has demanded time and again international economic conferences to straighten out world trade barriers.

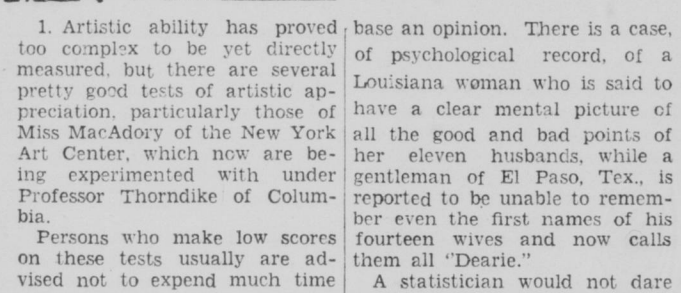

Down in Tennessee Senator Hull is looked upon as one of the state's heroes.

His appointment to the Roosevelt cabinet would be regarded there as reward for loyalty to the President-elect, and to old Democratic principles.

The senator, 61, was trained to be a lawyer; he once occupied the bench, and some of his friends still call him "Judge"; and he served as a captain of infantry in the Spanish-American war.

1. Artistic ability has proved too complex to be yet directly measured, but there are several pretty good tests of artistic appreciation, particularly those of Miss MacAdams of the New York Art Center, which now are being experimented with under Professor Thorndike of Columbia.

Persons who make low scores on these tests usually are advised not to expend much time or money in studying art. I shall be glad to put those interested in touch with a non-profit making, scientific organization, with the best known methods of advising for or against an artistic career.

Do not forget to enclose self-addressed stamped envelope.

2. I get that question fired at me every day, but there is no satisfactory data on which to base an opinion. There is a case, of psychological record, of a Louisiana woman who is said to have a clear mental picture of all the good and bad points of her eleven husbands, while a gentleman of El Paso, Tex., is reported to be unable to remember even the first names of his fourteen wives and now calls them all "Dearie."

A statistician would not dare draw conclusions from such limited marital experience records. But these two cases might indicate that women have a more clear cut picture of what they want.

3. Yes. When either member of a marriage union attempts to dissect or appraise the characteristics of the other love is likely to fly out of the window.

The proper is more than likely to place wrong values and wrong emphasis on the supposed facts discovered.

This is usually because of the prover's own limitations. There are no perfect personalities in this world, although lovers very properly think so. The best way to preserve this belief is to do as little critical analyzing as possible.

The world is simply alive with wonderful personalities when you consider them, not as parts, but as wholes. You probably are married to one.

Dr. Wiggam will be glad to answer questions dealing with problems of conduct, morals, beliefs, husband and wife, parent and child—any question in the field of human relationships. Questions of general interest will be answered in this department. If personal reply is desired enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope. Address Dr. Wiggam in care of The Indianapolis Times.

SEEK STRONGER FEDERAL RULE OVER UTILITIES

Dozen Plans Being Drafted for Presentation to Roosevelt.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance
WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Half a dozen plans for extending the power of the federal government over utilities are being prepared for presentation to President-Elect Roosevelt.

Some of them are intended to fit into his plans for reorganization of government bureaus and departments. Others propose legislation giving more authority to the government.

The first measure to make its appearance formally in congress has been presented by Representative Sam Rayburn (Dem. Tex.), chairman of the house interstate commerce committee.

Rayburn would create a federal communications and power commission and give it jurisdiction over radio, telephone and telegraph communication, and power companies operating on navigable streams of the United States.

A more far-reaching measure is being prepared which would give such a commission power to regulate all electric and gas utilities engaged in interstate commerce, oil and natural gas pipe lines crossing state lines, and radio and telephone and telegraph communication.

Holding companies would be brought under the jurisdiction of such a board by provision for regulation of information or advice sent across state lines on the subject of interstate power transmission.

A measure similar to this was introduced by Senator James Couzens (Rep. Mich.) in 1930, but never seriously was considered in the senate. It gave new and wider investigative powers to the power commission.

SAFE IS BLOWN OPEN BY YEGGS

$100 Loot of Gang; Offices of Coal Company Are Wrecked.

Yeggmens Sunday night blasted a safe and wrecked offices of the Muesing-Merrick Coal Company at 1475 English avenue, escaping with about $100, police were told.

Force of the blast crushed furnishings and damaged the walls and windows, Leslie Muesing, co-owner, said. A cash drawer under a counter containing no money, was torn open.

Narcotics of unestimated value, $100 in cash and stamps were taken by yeggmens who Sunday night carried away a small safe in a postal sub-station at 5750 West Washington street, Leo Mer, operator, said.
