Cine-Modes It's a Sporting Idea

Martha Sleeper

HOLLYWOOD, March 3.—Sports things are always the most interesting and diversified of Hollywood clothes.

Martha Sleeper is wearing a smart black and white checked waistcoat jacket, with short sleeves, double-breasted and finished with a trim white cording. There's a topcoat, tailored as the waistcoat and slightly mannish in line, and the costume is completed by a black, wrap-around, straightline skirt.

I saw Jean Harlow playing golf with Clark Gable, and Jean was wearing a blue and white striped silk dress with a full pleated skirt and sleeveless blouse.

JAZZ TUNES MINGLE WITH CHURCH ORGAN

Pastor at Kansas City Seeks to Put Laughter in Religion.

By United Press
KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 3.—The hot blaring of a jazz band mingled with the solemn notes of such old favorite hymns as "I Love to Tell the Story" in the Community church.

On the spot usually occupied by the pulpit, a young man and woman beat out furious tap dances. "Heat Waves" was the predominant theme song. It was a composition of "Red" Nichols, orchestra director at a downtown hotel. It purports to combine the screaming of brakes, grinding of street cars and swish of mops and other sounds of the heart of the downtown district.

The church presentation was sponsored by the pastor of the Community church, Dr. Burris A. Jenkins. It was his effort, he said, to "bring radiance back into religion."

A member of Nichols' orchestra rendered his unique version of "Sylvia." It was followed by the orchestra's subdued playing of "I Love to Tell the Story," with the audience joining in the singing. Briefly discussing the innovation, Dr. Jenkins said he would like to see religion filled with laughter.

Contract Bridge

THIS is the third article explaining the hold-up at no trump. Today we find the declarer employing the hold-up, not because he is afraid of the suit opened, as in the two previous articles, but because he wishes to keep his opponents in the lead.

The Bidding
Most players would open the South hand with a bid of one no trump due to the 150 ace. The writer is inclined to open the hand with one club in an endeavor to throw the no trump play into partner's hand, as I feel this type of hand better can be dummy if the hand is to be played at no trump.

However, to explain the hold-up, in this case South bids one no trump. North, with the king and queen, undoubtedly would go to two no trump, and South then would bid three no trump.

♠A-10-4	♥A-9	♦A-7-3	♣A-Q-10-5-2

West has two four-card suits. Unfortunately, the fourth best in either is the deuce, immediately disclosing to the declarer the fact that you hold only four cards of that suit.

Usually when there is a choice between a major and a minor suit of equal length it is preferable to open with the major.

However, the spade suit is extremely weak and to open it might give the declarer an extra trick; therefore, it looks as though the safest opening is the deuce of diamonds.

A small diamond is played from dummy and East must be careful to go right up with his king so as not to block the suit.

By the rule of eleven, the declarer knows that the original opener held only four diamonds.

However, he might be false-carding, and may have held five, so the declarer must play safe and refuse to win the first trick.

East returns the ten of diamonds and South knows now that East has no more diamonds. However, he should not win this diamond trick. Before playing to the trick, let us count up the hand.
