Hats for Spring Take International Trend

Beret, Fez, and Turban Give Foreign Touch to Milady's Headgear

BY JOAN SAVOY

IT'S all right to be a patriot, but hats this spring are international!

The smartest of them suggest the inspiration of some well-known headgear of another country or another time. The beret, the fez, the turban are all in this category.

But of course the best of them are variations that only a modern hat-maker can conjure up.

Straws, felts, crepe, ribbon, wool, and glossy materials such as cellophane fashion new hats.

While straws lead right this minute, felts will be worn in greater and greater numbers a little later on in the spring. So watch the felt and fabric hats!

One particularly smart new felt (left front) has a punched crown and small brim, in beige, with touches of red and white in the banding.

It looks a bit like the old German helmet, just enough to give it a sternness that the best tailored things are having.

THE Fascist fez (right front) is gray felt, with black fringes and insignia, a hat that has tre-

The fringe falls in flattering manner over the side that you tip down over your eye and the ends of the fringe form the little tip that sticks up into the air at the top.

Borrowing ideas from the African turban, but translating them into 1933 American style, is the brown and soft pink turban (left rear).

It is made entirely of folds of the brown and pink crepe, which alternate in color.

The top of the hat is of pink

fold and then two little brown bows stick right up out of this, to soften the whole effect.

Light blue straw, faced with navy blue crepe, fashions the big trimmed hat, which ties under the chin to anchor it, the way our own cowboys anchor their headpieces.

This hat is quaintly low-crowned, like some of the Victorian picture hats. Its brim swoops down in front and flares out slightly raised on the side.

Right in front are some enameled flowers and a band of the navy blue circles the rest of the crown.

Fair Garb

Chicago Exposition Is Reproduced in New Necktie Styles.

FASHIONS in men's ties took a new trend today as clothiers offered neck pieces imprinted with reproductions of "Century of Progress" buildings being erected for the Chicago world's fair. They are exhibiting at the Claypool.

Reproduced in the bright colors that are conspicuous in the spring display are the Travel and Transport building, the administration building, the electrical group, the facade of the hall of science, and the social science group.

Featured in the new styles for men are shirts with pleated backs and cuffs, as first worn by Maurice Chevalier.

Plaids are shown not only in shirts, ties, and hosiery, but in suit materials.

Prominent in the jewelry shown for men are innovations locked cuff links, tie clips, and collar pins. Suspenders, pajamas, underwear, and handkerchiefs also show the bright colors.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Your opinion is invited, as well as your problems. If you agree or differ with Jane Jordan, write what you think in a letter.

Dear Jane Jordan—As you said you would like to hear from some women who were married young, I thought I would write. I was married at 15 and was a mother at 16. My whole life was spoiled.

The only thing in life for me now is my son. He is 23 and he is the only man that I ever will love. My husband left me when my baby was a year old. I surely had a battle, but now I am happy.

I have a nice home and plenty. We are pals and he is all I care to live for. I do hope that girls will be wiser and not marry so young. Still, I am thankful that I have such a wonderful son.

YOUNG MOTHER

Answer—I have had many responses to my request for experiences from women who married before they were 16, and all agree that marriage in our civilization is too hard a job to be laid on the shoulders of a child. In your case, you have your son, but I wonder if you have faced the fact that one day in the not too distant future, you will have to give him up to some other woman?

Your letter left the impression that you were, perhaps, a little too devoted to the young man and had no interests apart from him. It is true, it will be hard on both of you when another woman comes into the picture, as she must, if your son is to lead a normally happy life.

You still are young, and no doubt attractive. There is no reason for you to resist the idea of a second marriage, for yourself. No son, no matter how wonderful, can be everything to his mother. Or, if he is, the situation is fraught with tragedy for him.

The mother-son relationship is healthiest when the mother's life abounds in other interests and is not centered too closely on him. She can do him a great deal of damage by leaning too heavily on him for emotional satisfaction, leaving him little time or desire for companionship of other women.

Mothers who do this seldom see themselves as selfish, pointing to their years of hardship and sacrifice to justify the attitude.

Therefore, if you want the remainder of your life to be free from disappointment, I advise you not to say, "My son is the only one who will love," but rather to expect to find some congenial soul who will be more than you son, thus setting the young man free from family ties and insuring a happy future for yourself.

Dear Jane Jordan—I work with a boy whom I have learned to like an awful lot, and he is more than sweet to me. I believe he wants to care more, but now a girl tells me that she knows positively he goes steady and has for two or three years, and possibly is engaged to a wonderful little girl.

I hate to fall too hard for this boy, as I am the kind that doesn't get over it so quickly, and I don't want to make a second fiddle of myself. Do you think he really loves the girl he's been keeping company with when he sees me on the same night he has a date with her? I'm on the brink of falling in love.

Do you think all is fair in love and war when people still are single? If he is interested in me, haven't I the same chance to win and hold him that she has?

THREE ON A MATCH

Answer—Before a man is married all the girls are free to try for him. Then, if ever, is his chance to look them over and decide on the one that he wants to live with. He preys on the other young lady; it is far better for her to give him up now than later.

I think it is entirely possible that you take his attentions too seriously, however. Girls are very irritating to men because they interpret every necessary as an indication of a desire for permanency. Women seem to be incapable of enjoying a transient friendship with a man without considering him as a potential husband.

Discipline your emotions and try not to fall head over heels in love

Set Examples of Courage for Your Child to Follow

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

ONE of the best ways to teach a little child courage or anything, in fact, is to do it with him. If he sees some one he loves very much, naturally, a parent, doing something, he not only will be braver himself about it, but that imitative interest of his will prove stronger than his dislike.

If a little child sits down to his supper at the big table and sees the others eating chops, gravy, sweet potatoes and pie, while facing him on his own little plate are toast, spinach and a cold egg, the chances are he will have to have every bite of his meal unless he is exceptionally well trained.

It would be the height of diplomacy, if he must be at the table, for each parent to eat a portion of what he eats, or otherwise, try to match their food to his.

A child screams when he gets washed. Instead of his father locking himself in the bathroom when he washes and shaves and brushes

Club Will Meet

Mrs. Henry O. Mertz, 5365 Central avenue, will be hostess Saturday for a meeting of the Calhoun Merrill Club, "Plays of Today" will be discussed by Mrs. R. L. Davidson.

YOUR CHILD

Set Examples of Courage for Your Child to Follow

his teeth, his little son might be allowed to see, And the lesson put over something like this, "Daddy has to be clean."

"He has to have his teeth brushed and his ears washed and his hair brushed because if he didn't people would say, 'Oh, what a dirty man! We don't like dirty people.' Daddy has a lot of friends because he is so nice and clean."

A child is afraid of water. Well, of course that is a story by itself and the best cure is to put him in an empty tub with no water at first and give him a sponge bath.

The next day half an inch may be put in the tub first and increased daily so slowly that the child won't notice it.

Association of Ideas

But sometimes even that fails. Then it is not beyond all propriety to have him lifted into the tub when his father is in the water or his mother, or some one else in the family he loves. Love is the key to everything.

Children can be cured of certain phobias this way, such as fear of the dark. Again the bathtub tactics may be used, such as closing the door of his bedroom at a little more each night until he is in darkness.

But this sense of terror about a dark room can not always be discouraged this way. Let something happen so he will be happy in the dark; by association of ideas associate the former bugaboo with something very interesting or very jolly. But be very careful that no queer noises or startling effects come toward him out of the dark.

Telling a jolly story in utter darkness is one suggestion and there are other ways. When he learns that darkness contains only happiness, he will become very matter-of-fact about it.

No talk about the dark should ever be uttered in his hearing.

You can not force a child out of a dread. It only accents it. Although he may not speak of it. You can not punish him out of it. Any more than you could be whipped out of a fear of an airplane or a burglar.

The whole trick depends on association of ideas and these ideas must come through substituted interest and through people he loves, trusts and admires. Real bravery is born of intelligent kindness.

The bully is the result of ridicule and wrong handling. The bully is an unfortunate coward who is afraid to tell he is afraid.
