

Saturday's Beer Return Will Mark End of Long Drouth for Athenaeum

Members of Once Famed Center of City Social and Cultural Life Looking Hopefully for Return of Former Activities.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

Gambrinus, the patron saint of malt and hops, will return to one of his old and favorite haunts Saturday night when the Deutsche Haus will celebrate the "end of twice seven years of drouth." Even Joe, the bartender, will be there to preside at the "Kneipe of the Athenaeum" where he has served thirty-eight and a half years.

Old members of the Athenaeum are looking upon the event hopefully, for to them it may mean the return of former activities, which were definitely a contribution to the social and cultural life of Indianapolis.

Herman Kothe, son of George Kothe, one of the founders, reminisced today of the early dramatic and musical ventures. He recalled the nights of chorus practice, which were followed by informal drinking and genial conversation.

"The same spirit of spontaneity and good fellowship has never returned since the hysterical period of the war and the restriction of prohibition," said Mr. Kothe, who is president of the Musikverein, the musical society.

Alexander Ernestoff was the director of the orchestra, which was prominent in the concerts and operettas at the Haus.

The "beerabend," beer night, Saturday will include dancing, singing, a dinner of famous German dishes and floor entertainment of Bavarian folk dances. The finale will be the Schupplattler tanz, a wile peasant dance.

Approximately 300 members will eat in the "kellersaal," decorated the same as in its earlier days. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hess, imported managers, are planning to serve "bratwurst," and other German dishes. Joe Seehofer, the bartender, is such a familiar figure that he is accused of "having the Athenaeum built around him."

Sat at Long Table

Masculine patrons are hoping for the return of the "kommers" when men sat at a long table for a general good time of drinking and toasting. Women were excluded from this ceremony, but were permitted to look on surreptitiously.

Otto Lieber, son of the Herman Lieber, the first president, now heads the board of the Athenaeum. G. A. Schnull, son of Henry Schnull; Franklin Vonnegut, son of Clemens Vonnegut; and Leo M. Rappaport, son of Phillip Rappaport, are members of the board and sons of founders. Other founders were Albert Kipp and William Hauelsen.

The present building was dedicated Feb. 22, 1894, to sponsor cultural undertakings, physical education and friendly gatherings of families.

Beer Garden to Open
Men met in the bowling alleys in the Turnverein for many spirited games. With coats off, sleeves rolled and mustaches carefully twirled, they spent many hours of leisure time.

The beer garden, which will be opened with the arrival of element weather, was the scene of many convivial occasions. The concert hall to some still echoes the famous music, and the ballroom recalls the memorable Washington balls and festive dances.

Mr. Lieber entertains a hope, as do other old German families, that the Gambrinus fest will mean the return of a composed and tolerant social attitude, and the friendly gathering of families for sane and happy entertainment.

Slenderize Your Waist

Lateral leg-raising is of great help to reduce waist and thighs.

This is the ninth of twelve daily exercises by Joe Auer, New York body building expert, outlining exercises to improve your looks and health.

BY JAC AUER
Written for NEA Service

DO you crave a pinched-in waistline, one of the slender waists that show to advantage in this year's clothes?

Today's exercise works directly for that. It also does its bit toward further reducing your thighs. It consists of raising both your legs, knees tight together, toes pointing downward, and swinging your legs in as near an arc as you can manage, without letting them touch the floor.

Balance yourself on one side, one arm flat on the floor, hand supporting your head. Place your other hand in front of you on the floor, where it gives you the greatest brace.

Now lift both legs together, toes pointed, and try to swing them up, around and to the back. The first day you may scarcely be able to get them off the floor without tipping over. Keep at it. This exercise calls for determination.

Persevere each day until you actually can manipulate the double leg swing in as high an arc as shown in the picture.

After trying the swing twice on your right side, roll over, brace yourself on your left side and swing in reverse direction.

This exercise calls into play all the back muscles through your waistline and all your thigh muscles. It gives them a chance to work as they do not usually have the opportunity to work.

In so doing, they build coordination and a poise that makes for grace. And at the same time, when you get all your muscles working correctly, fat will just melt away.

Next—Hip roll with arm swing.

FAIR STYLE

Architecture has gone into women's clothes, as evidenced in this charming new print in rich brown and rose tones, designed by Walter Dorwin Teague who was inspired by the exteriors of some of the buildings now being built for the Century of Progress Exposition.

This dress is particularly lovely and wearable, being a one-piece model, with flaring three-quarter cape sleeves, an old-fashioned yoke and a cute fichu made of brown organdy, that droops over one shoulder and ties in a bow. It is removable for laundering.

Slenderizing Styles Are Feature of McCall Paris Fashion Show at Block's

Gowns, Suits, Daytime Frocks, Beach and Sport Costumes Are Modeled; Individuality Stressed.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

SLENDERIZING styles for larger women were accented Monday and today in the McCall Paris fashion show on the first floor of the William H. Block Company. Mrs. Janet Phillips of New York personally directed women who attended the show in adaptation of the mode to their individuality.

Gowns, suits, daytime frocks, beach and sport costumes were modeled by Misses Aileen and Mary Elizabeth Driscoll, Miss Rosemary Ryan and Mrs. Edwin O'Neill. Mrs. Phillips described changes possible in the making of these garments through use of McCall patterns, and displayed fabrics suitable for each pattern's use.

A simple fashion, cut in straight line from shoulder to hem, with flared insets in front and back of the skirt, was recommended especially for the larger woman. The model shown was of Sandown crepe, with organdy puffs added to the sleeves, and a perky organdy bow at one shoulder.

A gingham beach and sport costume was cut to the waist in back, with a square neck, and the shoulder straps buttoned in front to the bodice.

This was described as the costume being worn by many women on Florida beaches, ideal for wear directly over the bathing suit.

A striking costume of white and red Nobysheer fabric, also designed for slenderizing purposes, featured a straight lined skirt with box pleats in front, and a red jacket of hip length, without sleeves.

Sport costumes were developed in attractive color combinations. A beige and brown ensemble of Skinner's Trouble-proof crepe had a gumpie effect of brown, with long sleeves of the beige material, and beige suspenders. A short detachable cape of beige was worn with this.

Pique in white and colors was used in a number of the summer sports frocks, while gingham and zephyrs, muslin, and voile carried out the cotton idea. Both Eleanor Blue and Anna Blue, in "First Lady prints," gained prominent color mention.

The creations of many of the noted fashion designers were expressed in the show. Prominent in the mention of these were Patou, Vionnet, Bruyere, Lucile Paray, and Goupy.

Quiet Note Features Shoes

THE spring shoe styles, as represented by the Nisley Shoe Store, strike a note of quiet, both in color and design. Black, grey, blue, chaff and Indes brown lead in colors, with some of the most attractive models designed in a combination of chaff and brown.

Punchwork forms the decoration of most of the walking shoes, with a T-strap of extreme breadth taking an outstanding place. Gypsy ties are popular, coinciding with the vogue for tailored suits.

Probably the widest range of shoe clips and bows for years is shown this season. These are much smaller than in former years, and the most desirable ones are made of bone or horn, with metallic trimming. Other clips of grosgrain ribbon, enamel, and leather are of the small pattern also.

Rhinestone clips are to be used as usual on shoes for formal wear. These shoes will be of more and faille. Many of the white more evening slippers have silver trimming and silver heels.

Refrigerator Glasses Revolve

REVOLVING refrigerator sets of glass, as shown at Charles Mayer's, will simplify the problems of the housewife who has limited refrigerator space. These are made in groups of five quart-size covered glass dishes, on a revolving metal disk, and can be turned in the refrigerator, so that any one of them can be removed without displacing the others.
