

AVOID GROUP PRACTICE, CITY DOCTORS TOLD

Fishbein Condemns Forms of Competitive Bidding in Medicine.

The medical profession must revalue its own work and avoid group practice in these times of depression, Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the journal of the American Medical Association and special writer for The Times, told 500 members of the Indianapolis Medical Society at the Athenaeum, Tuesday night.

"The man of yesterday was not concerned with the complexities of today of which medicine has become a part," he declared.

"The modern home is no longer a place to be sick," he continued. "With 7,000 grade A hospitals listed in the country for 1932 and 7,000 doctors and 32,500 nurses graduated in the same year, the patient obviously should take advantage of institutions.

Revalue New Factors

"When the committee on medical care was formed in 1927 there was no depression and more money was available than people knew what to do with," Dr. Fishbein declared.

"The situation is far different today. If there had been a depression in 1927 there would not have been a million dollars available to form the committee. Today, when such a study is far more important, $10,000 could not be raised to form a committee.

The only answer at the present time to the problem of medical care must be made by the physicians, themselves. They must revalue the new factors that have come into medical care.

Condemns Competitive Bidding

Dr. Fishbein condemned competitive bidding in the practice of medicine, declaring it resulted in skimping in the care of the patient. Medical care offered on a price basis alone is a menace to the public, he asserted.

"Despite the age of specialization, the general practitioner is the backbone of the medical profession," said Dr. Fishbein. "He has the confidence and belief of his patient, a thing entirely out of the life of the group physician."

The remainder of the commercial section of the town has been destroyed, he reported.

The last talesmen examined and the last accepted for service, Mack took his seat in the jury box late Tuesday.

He told his business, and when asked if he were busy said:

"I'll say I am." His company has been named one of the "three-best" beer wholesalers.

On examination by attorneys, Mack declared that his firm was preparing to handle a new form of beverage."

During a recess, however, he told his story to a reporter.

"With beer coming in Friday, our firm is arranging to handle the product of the Falls City Brewing Company, Louisville," he said. "We made arrangements for a shipment of 1,800 cases on the first day and had consented to send three out our own trucks, each to transport 600 cases."

He declared he believed it his duty as a citizen, but at a time like this, with 400 local orders to be filled, "the beer business looks pretty big to me."

Woman, Running to Save Dog, Is Struck by Auto

Did My Bit Along With Kate Smith, Laughs City Heroine.

Kate Smith appealed to the radio audience Wednesday night to help find a lost dog.

Miss Lillian Vincent, housekeeper for Mrs. Bessie Gripprich, 136 East St. Joseph street, who looks like the prima donna of the networks and cherishes her love for dogs, listened in.

Suddenly a small Pekingese dog named "Sonny," owned by Mrs. Gripprich, ran out of the house held.

toward the trolley tracks on North Pennsylvania street.

"Save Sonny, he'll be run over!" cried Mrs. Gripprich.

The housekeeper chased the dog, which ran across North Pennsylvania street.

An automobile driven by Charles Willoughby, 829 South Sheffield avenue, swerved to miss the fleeing dog and hit Miss Vincent.

STATE SAVINGS TO PAY LITTLE, ASSERTS JUDGE

Closed Bank May Yield Nothing to Depositors, Declares Cox.

Depositors of the defunct State Savings and Trust bank can expect little, if any, return of their funds, it was declared today by Circuit Judge Earl R. Cox in the course of a hearing attended by Homer C. Elliott, receiver for the bank, and representatives of creditors.

"It is my belief," Cox said, "that depositors should be informed of the true condition of the State Savings and Trust Company. They probably will receive only a small portion of their deposits and may receive nothing."

"This certainly, while unpleasant, is better than uncertainty regarding the situation."

Cox praised the work of Elliott as receiver and explained to Richard Evans, a creditors' representative, economies in handling the work, pointing out that receivables of the State Savings and Trust, the City Trust and Washington bank are being handled in a single office.

He charged that between $25,000 and $30,000 had been wasted by Brandt C. Downey, former Washington bank receiver, through use of bank property as offices when there was no need.

The court gave Elliott permission to turn back to the mortgage holder, the Virginia Life Insurance Company, the Drexel Arms apartment building at 730 North Illinois street.

The building was mortgaged for $50,000 by the State Property Company, a subsidiary of the State Savings and Trust Company.
