Let's Explore Your Mind

1. Character readers have made extravagant claims that blondes are "always and everywhere" "driving," "dynamic" and "positive," and make better salespersons than brunets, who are, they claim, "slow," "imitative," "submissive," etc.

Dr. Donald Paterson and Katherine Dodge of the University of Minnesota, had nine-ty-four people carefully judge the traits of 187 blondes and 137 brunets. The results were a ludicrous disproof of all such bosh. The two types ran neck and neck.

H. G. Kenagy of Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, had forty sales managers select their best salesmen. The brunet men slightly outbid the blondes as high power salesmen. The entire doctrine is pure moonshine. Skin color, real or artificial, has nothing to do with mental qualities.

2. Yes, decidedly. In rural and backward mountain districts especially it has bettered the manners as well as the houses, furniture and social habits of the people.

'Beer Overture' Returns to Amusement Programs

Resener Discusses Famous 'Drinking Songs' That Have Been Heard by Thousands in Theaters for Years.

BY WALTER D. HICKMAN

OVERTURES in leading theaters that have big or novelty concert orchestras keep their overtures in tune with national and social events.

These are always done in the spirit of fun and satire and that is the reason that orchestra conductors are now considering, for want of a better name, a "beer overture."

Walked over the other night to Ed Resener's musical lounge underground at the Indiana. This is the study of the conductor of the Indiana concert orchestra.

Resener was seated at his desk going over new scores when I entered to find out what conductors were going to do with "beer overtures."

"Resener said, 'I have an idea of putting on what I call a 'Drinking Song Overture' in a couple of weeks."

"There are some beautiful melodies that come under the head of drinking songs," he said. "The 'Drinking Song' from 'The Student Prince' is beautiful."

Resener has done lot of research as well as "lot of remembering" of what is known as well known drinking songs.

He told me that his "drinking Song Overture" would probably be made up of the following: "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," "We Won't Go Home 'Til Morning," "How Dry I Am," "Always Fair Weather," "Just a Little Drink," "Heidelberg," "In a Collar Cool," "Lieber Augustin," "Where Is My Little Dog Gone," "Sweet Adeline," "Drinking Song" from "The Student Prince" and for the finale, "Stein Song."

Then we talked about people waiting to sing and we both recalled that we have tried to sing some of the songs he is considering for his overture.

"I know people who like to sing so well that they sing in the bathtub and that is no fooling," Ed said with a smile.

He believes that with the return of beer that the good old-fashioned waltz will return in added popularity. Not only for dancing but just as music.

"In the last five or six years, we have had trouble in playing good music," he said in discussing the jazz age of music. "But people do love good music. A fad may change things for a while but good music always comes back."

Then in thinking of drinking songs, Resener told me, "My idea is that some of the sweetest melodies in the world are to be found in drinking songs."

Resener is in line with his opinion in the change of musical tastes and those that will follow in the next few months with other leaders of big concert orchestras.

INSECTS' LEGS ARE MARVEL OF NATURE'S WORK

Biologist Lists Many Types for 450,000 Different Kinds of 'Bugs.'

By DAVID DIETZ
Script-Howard Science Editor

The biologist, studying the varieties of life, is impressed with the multitude of experiments which nature has tried. Take, for example, the matter of legs.

Nature has tried all sorts of combinations. Man has two legs. So do birds. But mammals have four, insects have six, spiders and ticks have eight, lobsters and crabs have ten, sowbugs and pillbugs have fourteen, and many creatures have still more.

The millipede holds the record for legs, with no less than 426.

Since man represents the present pinnacle of evolution, it would appear that nature has settled on two as the best number.

But she has carried on the greatest number of experiments with the combination of six legs. For the six-legged creatures, namely the insects, are the most numerous on earth.

Scientists have catalogued 650,000 species of animals, ranging from one-celled protozoa to man. Of this number, 450,000 are insects.

Arrangement Gives Stability

In walking, the insect has three legs on the ground and three in the air at one time. As biologists have remarked, this is an ideal arrangement for stability.

The legs of different species of insects are designed to do different sorts of jobs. Some are best adapted for climbing, others for running, others for jumping.

Still others have legs with sticky pads on them which enable the insects to walk upside down on the under side of leaves.

The jumping ability of some insects has been commented upon frequently. For example, a grasshopper, one inch long, can jump a distance ranging from six to twelve feet.

A man, endowed with jumping power in proportion to his size, would be able to jump over the Washington monument.

Skeleton Covers Outside

The jumping ability of the insect is due in part to its light weight. But it is due in greater part to the construction of its skeleton and muscles.

A radical difference between the insect and the mammal is that the insect has its skeleton on the outside of its body. The skin or shell of the insect is its skeleton. He has no interior skeleton. The muscles of the insect are attached to the inside of its shell.

The result is that for its size, the insect has larger and more powerful muscles than the mammal whose muscles have to be anchored to an interior skeleton.

The insect's structural plan also results in greater leverage for his muscles.

A third advantage in having the skeleton on the outside is that his more delicate tissues are protected from injury or hard bumps.
