

Chess Tests Agility of Young Mind

Youthful Group of Fans in City Headed by Veteran.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

CHESS may be portrayed in the movies as a game for testy old gentlemen with gouty feet, but to a group of young men, headed by Constant Southworth, son of the Rev. George S. Southworth, it's a challenge for young and agile minds. The Rev. Mr. Southworth, before he came to Indianapolis from M' s s a church, was an avid participant in the state chess club tournaments. Young Southworth as a boy can remember standing on one foot—chin in hands—for hours as his father pondered over moves.

"There's no other game which is so complete an absorption," claims the Rev. Mr. Southworth. "You simply must obliterate everything else from your mind; that is, if you hope to save the king!"

True to feminine tradition, the queen is the most powerful of the thirty-two pieces, and she can be moved in any direction. But the king is the most important, for the game depends on his safety.

No Game for Unwary
Chess appeals to the young players with its warlike tactics.

"It's no game for the unwary," says young Southworth. "You must plan your attack, defense and capture like generals of hostile armies." Southworth's group includes Frank Lee, George Merritt, Robert King, Frank Dale, Richard Cashon, Edward Meith, William Pfennig, John Buehler and Eric Storz.

Years for Tournament
Willis C. Nusbaum wiles away hours at the Coliseum Club where he reigns as the strategic guardian of the king. He laments the scarcity of players, for he yearns for tournament play.

"I never miss a chance to play," he says.

Benjamin Franklin is remembered by chess players as more than the flier of an epoch-making kite. He introduced chess playing in this country.

If you know your Shakespeare, you'll recall that Ferdinand and Miranda of "The Tempest" clashed their wits at the chess board.

Supper Dress Versatile

Sunday Eve Garb Good at Garden Party

BY JOAN SAVOY
NEA Service Writer

SO-CALLED garden party clothes always intrigue women, even though so few ever get to garden parties.

Sunday night supper dresses are much more in tune with American life as it is lived today. And approximately the same type of pretty, feminine thing is suitable both for Sunday suppers and garden parties. The dress with a big hat, and there you are!

If you feel it in your bones that you are going to be asked out a lot, or will have to entertain a lot, or perhaps go to several stylish weddings, then you'll need this type of costume.

One particularly good supper dress is made of gray organza, with lovely molded lines, over a gray satin slip. It has long, tight organza sleeves, making it quite the right thing for dinner parties, too.

The particularly smart new feature is the fichu made with ruffled edges that give the desired wide-shouldered effect, then taper to a point at high waistline and the ends cross to girdle the dress and fasten in the back.

Where the fichu meets at the V neck, there is a handsome red and rhinestone pin, a very effective touch of color against the moon-glow organza.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Let Jane Jordan interpret the modern viewpoint of you. If you suspect that your ideas are somewhat out of date, write her a letter today!

Dear Jane Jordan—I have been married thirteen years and have five children. I found out last week that my husband has been unfaithful to me over a period of five years with a number of women. He says he is sorry and assures me it never will happen again if I will forgive him.

I love him as much as ever, but find it very hard to forgive him. I feel that I must carry on for the children's sake. I can keep my mind off those things during the day, but I go nearly insane at night. Please tell me what to do.

LOST FAITH.
Answer—Do nothing. The hardest thing in the world for a woman to understand is how her husband can love her and still be unfaithful. The hardest thing in the world for a man to understand is why a woman is so outraged by his casual infidelities.

In the mind of the average man, the urge to procreate is not connected with love. Any willing woman with a scrap of attractiveness can stir his senses for the moment, but he promptly forgets her the next day.

The physical act has no significance to him beyond the pleasure of the moment. In the mind of the average woman, the urge to procreate has become highly idealized. To her the physical act is a symbol of love and loyalty. When her senses are stirred, her heart is stirred also. A bodily bond is not one into which she can enter lightly, and forget the next day.

Therefore, when her husband is unfaithful a woman is outraged to an extent which he can not understand. Her tendency is to renounce him as a husband, to throw out all of the good because of the bad. Her heart still argues for him, but her pride argues against him. In her despair she asks herself what she shall do.

If she still loves her husband, she will do better to stay with him and remain a little blind to his occasional flings. She can not impose her own idealism on him. No human can hope to possess another, or keep him from experiences which he longs to have.

Panteleimon Romanof, in a book called "The New Commandment," deplores the possessive element in a woman's love. Sergei, one of the book's characters, says: "Will there never come a time when women will stop being kept women, not in the monetary, but in the spiritual sense, which is far worse?" Later on, he comes to the conclusion that "Women must alter their psychology, or die."

To Sergei, woman's absolute dependence upon some one else, her desire to fill the whole life of her lover, is completely immoral. It is a question which every woman should consider seriously and without prejudice.

For years women have been struggling to alter masculine psychology to no effect. Perhaps, after all, her salvation lies in changing her own.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am 17 years old and have been going with a fellow 19 years old. We

Meat Tips on Meat

"I find that women know less about meat than any other article of diet," she explains. "It is not necessary for meat to be a drain on the family pocketbook, for more servings may be made from the boned cuts than from the same cut of meat with the bone left in."

She suggests such economical cuts as "rolled sirloin," roast, and rolled pot roast of beef.

In her lectures, Miss Chambers will discuss the buying and preparation of meat, its nutritive value, and also suggest dishes to be used for a well balanced and attractive meal.

Miss Chambers boasts of being old-fashioned. "I approve of father cutting the meat at the table, and with intelligently prepared food, this may be made easy for him."

Lists Two Methods
She lists two general methods of cooking meat. Tender cuts are prepared by exposing them to dry heat, as in broiling or pan broiling; less tender cuts are cooked in the presence of moisture, as in braising, stewing and cooking in water.

"Feeding the Family Easily" is the topic with which Miss Chambers will deal Tuesday in her opening lecture. The dishes she will prepare in the demonstration will be placed on display so that the audience may see the finished product.

In her Wednesday lecture, Miss Chambers will discuss "Foods with a Taste Appeal," as she prepares such articles as corn stuffing, jack frost salad, and date yams as side dishes for lamb, broiled steak and pork roast.

Each woman will receive a recipe book in addition to the daily programs which contain the recipes used that day.

Soup Will Be Baked at Times Cooking Institute

Other Culinary Marvels to Be Concocted at School Opening Tuesday.

Ruth Chambers has chosen a host of the most appetizing dishes in the whole history of cooking to demonstrate at The Times cooking school to be held in the English theater Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 2 p. m. and Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

Take as example the cushion style pork roast, with corn stuffing, which she prepares the first day of the school as the piece de resistance of a meal that's fit for a king. This is a dish guaranteed to put any husband in a good humor and represents something new in meat cuts. It is a cut which is as easy on the pocketbook as it is tantalizing to the taste!

Then there is a French leg of lamb, served with a pineapple peppermint sauce. Another dish which ranks high in "taste appeal" is a pot roast with horseradish which Miss Chambers prepares.

She Bakes Soup
How many women would think of baking a soup? Sounds fantastic? Come to this cooking school and get Ruth Chambers' recipe for baked onion soup and learn how it is done. The recipe for this epicurean dish is one of the most delicious on the program.

But meats and soups aren't the only things women will learn about at this cooking school. On the first day Miss Chambers also prepares, among a host of other good things, a dessert called "frozen creams" which almost melts in your mouth. And she will give you a recipe for the "Cake of the Month" which will become the cake of the week for most families, it is that good!

Every session of this cooking school will be remarkable for the delicious dishes prepared by Miss Chambers and her assistant, Miss Nora Altie, who is an artist in garnishing and arranging foods so they have a real "partied" appearance.

Meeting Called Tonight
To acquaint food dealers with the educational work of Miss Chambers a meeting has been called for tonight at 8 o'clock in the English theater, to which all master meat cutters, grocers and their wives have been invited. This meeting will be addressed by R. C. Pollock, secretary of the National Livestock Meat Board of Chicago, and Max O. Cullen, manager of its department of meat merchandising, who will conduct a meat-cutting demonstration. Miss Chambers also will be present.

W. W. Allerdyce, chairman of the Indianapolis Packers' Association, expressed belief that a large attendance of food merchants will be present.

"In this day of small kitchens, we are realizing the necessity for small cuts of meat," remarked Miss Chambers today.

Ancient Chinese Secret Is Used in Making of New Long-Lasting Paint

Tung Oil, Discovery of Centuries Ago, Is Property of Preservative Liquid Placed On Market by Nu-Enamel Company.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

THE ancient arts of the Chinese have been utilized in the making of a paint which can be applied to any surface. The paint is washable, and is guaranteed not to be affected by climatic conditions. This is Nu-Enamel, distributed in Indianapolis by the Central Nu-Enamel store on the Monument Circle.

Centuries ago the Chinese discovered that Tung oil was a most effective preservative. They used it as a means of waterproofing and weatherproofing all surfaces requiring lasting protection from the elements. It now is used by them in the waterproofing of silks.

The manufacturers of Nu-Enamel have used this native Chinese oil in the mixing of their paint. Nu-Enamel first was formulated in Texas, where the salt air and climate made it necessary to use a paint that could withstand adverse weather conditions. Since its manufacture, an attempt is being made to raise Tung trees in Florida.

Tung oil is obtained by pressing the fruit or nuts of the Tung trees. Its use retards checking, cracking and peeling of painted surfaces.

More than twenty original colors and as many mixed colors are displayed on the color chart for the use of customers in the Nu-Enamel store. Catering to the "do-it-yourself" painter, the store, the personnel of the store is prepared to give individual advice and help to the amateur painter who desires to refinish some old bit of furniture, bath-room walls, kitchen woodwork, and even automobiles.

Suitable for Any Surface
ACCORDING to the manager of the store, many women during the past year have been successful in refinishing their own automobiles with the use of this new paint. The paint surface dries in four hours, and is completely dry in twenty-four hours.

The most unusual thing about it is that one coat satisfactorily will cover a surface, except in painting a complete color change or in painting ivory and white. In these instances, two coats are necessary. The paint can be applied successfully to any surface; even glass or leather. It will withstand chemicals, boiling water, and various strong acids.

Nu-Enamel comes in two, four, twelve and twenty-four ounce cans, as well as gallon sizes. For its successful use it is suggested that the painter use the Nu-Enamel tack-cloth, which is a cloth saturated with a slow drying liquid, which wipes all particles of dust from the surface before the paint is applied.

A special house paint has also been made by the Nu-Enamel company, which also is washable.
