

Girl Is High Bidder for Golf Crown

Miss Davidson Expects to Prove Skill in Club Tourney.

By BEATRICE BURGAN Times Woman's Page Editor

WHEN Clarabel Davidson plays in the Indiana Woman's Golf Association tournament next week at Highland Golf and Country Club, there'll be several reasons why she'll want to "make good." Each time she swings a club she'll be reminded, "Dad expects me too."

Before she entered the city tournament this summer her father, Roy Davidson, told her, "If you break a 100, I'll give you a new set of clubs." Of course, this being her first tournament, she was a little dubious about the outcome, and thought longingly of a new set of clubs.

She qualified with a 101, a score better than many made by veteran players. She found out competition was an incentive and not something to upset her poise. She went out the next day with a determination to have those promised clubs. She finished the tournament in the nineties.

That's the story of Miss Davidson's first tournament. With the exception of a little casual playing two years ago, she's only played golf one season.

Miss Davidson has been training under the tutelage of Roy Smith, professional at Avalon Country Club. "She's learned all I can show her now," explains Smith. "She only needs some good hard playing."

Never Gets Frightened

That's just what she's doing. "I confess I weaken a little when I think of competing in such a large field," confessed Miss Davidson. "But I refuse to let it frighten me. I'm going out to win every match I can."

"Even if I never win, I love the game. Naturally I enjoy improving my game, but it's the people I meet and the pleasure of friendly matches that I like best," Miss Davidson explained.

"Naturally I'd like to be a champion player, but I don't entertain any such thoughts," she said. "I merely was lucky in beginning so well."

Miss Davidson is the only member of the family who takes the game seriously. Mr. Davidson plays but not in tournaments.

Field Is Large

She'll have a large field of younger players to compete against. Miss Helen Mattice will be playing on her home course, and Miss Dorothy Ellis of Meridian Hills will have the advantage of several seasons of tournament experience.

Miss Dorothy Gustafson of South Bend and Miss Clara Belle English of Lafayette will be visiting title seekers. Miss Frances Kottman of Highland is busy practicing evenings after her work at the Catholic Community Center, and Miss Caroline Hitz is spending the days on the Meridian Hills course.

Delta Zeta Psi sorority will meet Monday night at the home of Miss Betty Holliker, 18 West Twenty-seventh street.

Alpha Gamma sorority will meet at 8 tonight at the home of Miss Sue Stackhouse, 6117 College avenue.

Daily Recipe

CHOP SUEY

2 pounds of lean pork, cut in cubes
1 tablespoon fat
2 cups chopped celery
2 cups sliced onions
1 teaspoon salt
1-4 teaspoon pepper
1-2 cup rice, uncooked

Brown the pork in the fat. Add the celery, onions, salt, pepper and one-half cup of water, and simmer until the pork and vegetables are tender. If desired, thicken the mixture with 1 tablespoon of flour mixed with enough water to make a paste about 3 minutes before removing it from the fire.

Boil the rice for about 20 minutes, or until tender, in 2 quarts of water, to which 1 teaspoon of salt has been added. Drain the rice and serve it hot with the meat and vegetable mixture.

Golf Tourney Entrant

Miss Clarabel Davidson

Miss Clarabel Davidson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Davidson, is more golf-minded than usual this week. She's preparing herself to play in the state tournament next week at Highland Golf and Country Club.

After breaking a 100 in her first tourney play in the recent city tournament, she has a personal record to maintain. Out at Avalon Country Club she's been attracting attention with her consistent improvement.

Manners and Morals

By JANE JORDAN

Young people are invited to bring their love problems to Jane Jordan. If some letter strikes an answering chord in your heart, let us hear from you!

Dear Jane Jordan—A young man in my office is very much in love with me. He is deserving, ambitious, and has a great future. I am not in love with him, but I am terribly fond of him. I admire his ability and success. He has taken it for granted that I love him, yet I have given him no earthly reason to see it that way. I wonder whether I should marry him or not. I always would be overpowered with money, kindness, and his love. Since we are connected in a business way, we could do much in developing new ideas in the business world.

There is another big factor. We are socially different. He is absorbed in good literature and I in social pursuits. Don't you think, to keep pace with the intellectual cult of today, that it is just as necessary to develop personal acquaintances of your personality in putting your ideas over the world? I also would like to add that if I should marry an outsider, independent from the office, that I would be ostracized morally from my employer.

LINDA

Answer: Your last sentence has me puzzled considerably. Most girls do not consider their employer's preference when they get married, and most employers discourage love affairs among employees.

I wonder if your employer more closely approximates your ideal of a man than your lover. A marriage which would establish you in the office, working for the good of the business, would keep you near the employer without condemning you to a life of single blessedness.

Of course, this is a shot in the dark. I should be interested in hearing your own explanation of your own unwillingness to be "morally ostracized" from your employer.

It seems that intellectually you recognize the young man as a desirable husband, but that emotionally you do not respond. I am not opposed to marriages on rational grounds, as they sometimes succeed better than marriages on romantic grounds. It sometimes happens that, when you go through the motions, the emotions follow.

In this instance, however, your reasons are a little too self-seeking to be reliable guides to marriage. A successful union requires an enduring interest in the welfare of the other party and above the self. This you have not shown.

Misfortune is to be anticipated when a socially minded person marries a companion whose social feeling is not so well developed. I gather that your suitor's chief interest is in ideas, whereas yours is in people. Since both interests are essential to a well-rounded life, theoretically you ought to make good teammates. But if each of you resists the sphere of the other, it doesn't make for a workable combination.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a young girl of 18, very much in love with a young man three years older. He is a very nice young man, but I am at a loss to know whether he cares for me or not. He has told me and others that he does, but he acts so strangely that it is very difficult for me to believe him.

At times he acts as if he doesn't want to be bothered with me. He goes to college and hardly ever writes, but never fails to come to see me when he is home. He is very popular with the fair sex, and has other dates, I am sure. I don't know whether to drop him altogether or not.

LONESOME LOVER.

Answer—Why drop a pleasant friendship, just because you can't enjoy it exclusively? The young man has other interests besides falling in love, and when they intervene, I have no doubt that he doesn't wish to be bothered with a girl. Provide yourself with some similar interests and you won't concentrate so heavily on him.

Dear Jane Jordan—I kept steady company with a fellow for practically two years, and what I mean it was steady. We were together every evening. He lost his job here last fall and returned to his home in the east. He came back to see me in October and again this month.

He says he does not believe there is such a thing as love, but also says that if I am not his future partner, no one else will be. If he really cared for me, wouldn't he ask me to be engaged to him? He does not believe in tying a girl down with promises which never may materialize.

He isn't working and says he would not marry without some assurance of a job. I can't go on waiting forever, as it will get no place. What would you suggest?

ONE WHO IS DISCOURAGED.

Your friend sounds like a sane, sensible young man who is determined not to let his emotions run away with him, and who will not tie himself down with responsibilities which he is not able to shoulder. I think he is well worth keeping as a friend, but that keeping him from seeing other men. If you meet one you like better, that's just his bad luck.

The jacket is fashion's coat of arms for every occasion, especially for every evening occasion. Because in this season of casual invitations, "drop in tonight," means you must be prepared for anything from ping pong to visiting celebrities.

And if you are not sure what the other guests will wear, a jacket takes all the uncertainty out of your costume. You can wear your most formal gown and keep it informal with this little frilly affair that looks like part of the gown.

This model is everything a smart jacket should be. It lies on snugly at the waist and it has that smart exaggerated shoulder width introduced in double ruffled sleeves. And you can run it up in an hour or two, it is so simple to put together. In crisp taffeta, pique or organdy it harmonizes with everything. The pattern envelope shows just how little material it requires. If you like this, as of course you do, be sure to send for our fashion book. Roller Skating Boys Do Inter-Office Errands in Western Union Building

Unique 'Rink' Arrangement Speeds Work in Transmitting of Messages; Crew Has Few 'Traffic' Victims.

By HELEN LINDSAY

THOUGH society matrons and sub-debs daily grow more enthusiastic about the revived sport of roller skating, the most novel rink in the city is in operation in the Western Union offices in the heart of the business district. For ten years, a crew of young men has skidded perilously about the eighth floor of the Western Union office, taking messages from one department to another. Like all other skaters, they sometimes come to grief, but no serious accident has resulted from use of the skates since they were put to use.

The skates were adopted by Western Union to gain speed, and to keep the boys from growing fatigued in their endless moving about. Skates are furnished the young men from the Western Union office. They are especially equipped with fibre rollers, and the floor of the office is covered with a similar substance, to eliminate noise. A pair of skates lasts from eight months to a year in this service.

Accuracy and speed are the first requirements of all Western Union employees. Employees in practically all departments are trained in special classes conducted by the company, to prepare them for the different phases of their work.

Messages are sent from different route stations in the building over machines which will transmit four messages at one time. They are written on specially constructed machines which send out a perforated tape, much like a miniature player piano roll.

From six branch offices over the city, tubes are laid under city streets to the main Western Union office, through which messages are carried. These are operated by compressed air, like the sales slips in department stores.

All messages are kept on file, according to government requirements, for one year, at which time they are burned, to keep them from coming into the hands of persons to whom they do not belong.

No Western Union employee is allowed to divulge the contents of a message. Only the sender and the person to whom the message is addressed has access to the message on file.

Code Going Into Disuse

ALTHOUGH Western Union service is the result of the code and system invented by Samuel F. B. Morse, the old Morse code is fast going into disuse, and at present is used only by railroads. A limited number of "old-timers" who are expert senders of the Morse code, still are in the employ of the company.

Morse was a painter, and the inventor of the first crude telegraph instrument. He built it on a picture frame, and showed it to his friends in December, 1835. At that time, Morse was professor of the Literature of the Arts of Design of New York university, improving his instruments in spare time.

On Sept. 2, 1837, Morse demonstrated to a few friends that he could send messages over a wire 1,700 feet long, stretched back and forth in his rooms on Washington square.

At the present time, the telegraph and cable service started by this invention covers the entire world. On May 27 the light from the Star of Arcturus caused signals from four observatories to pass over Western Union lines and opened the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago. Thirty feature displays are shown by Western Union at the fair.

One is a historical display, including fourteen original models of famous historic instruments, some for operation by visitors. On a large painting of the world, illuminated charts flash the names of cities, and the cost of a telegram or cablegram when the visitor presses a button.

Operating Branches Numerous

OTHER displays show the method of transmission of a message from London to New York; the production of lightning striking miniature telegraph wires, demonstrating the protector diverting the electricity into the ground; the way in which Western Union clocks electrically synchronize each hour; and the operation of the A. D. T. manual and automatic fire alarm, automatic sprinkler supervision, and burglar alarm. Century of Progress buildings and grounds are being protected by this system.

No other business has such unique calls for service, according to Carleton V. Pickett, manager. He tells an amusing story of a woman who came into the office recently, and presented him with a bunch of keys.

She explained that she just had arrived from Muncie, and had taken the keys with her by mistake. Her husband was locked out of the house, and she asked that Western Union deliver them to him. When Pickett explained to her that it would be necessary to send a messenger by bus with them, she was astonished. She had believed that they could be sent by wire, as a regular part of Western Union service, he related.

SHOWER WILL BE GIVEN FOR BRIDE

Mrs. Conney Nichols, 1117 North Colorado street, will give a kitchen shower Friday night for Mrs. Merrill Boles, whose marriage was announced by her mother, Mrs. George William Graham, at a party Tuesday night. Mrs. Boles was Miss Letitia Graham before the wedding June 29.

Mrs. Graham was assisted at the party at her home, 885 North Grant street, by Mrs. Joseph Hopkins and Mrs. William Blake. Thirty-two guests were entertained.

Supper Is Given

Miss Frances Dearborn, 4100 Otterbein avenue, was hostess Wednesday night at a lawn supper given by Alpha Xi alumnae chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha sorority. A bridge party followed the business meeting.
