Insists on 'Right to Use

township outside the mile square had resulted in numerous increases to home owners, although business property in the downtown area still received the benefit of the 20 per cent blanket valuation reduction made by McCloskey last year.

In previous statements, McCloskey had termed the increases an "equalization," seeking to appraise all property in similar locations on an identical basis.

The "equalization" resulted in the 20 per cent cut being added in some cases, McCloskey admitted, and even reaching a higher figure than the valuation before the reduction.

Contradicted by List

Brattain's assertion that majority of reductions were made in cases of home owners partly is contradicted by the list of valuations to be appealed by McCloskey to the state tax board.

A partial list of the contested improvement valuations follow:

Assessor's valuation	Reduced to
American Leather Company	$45,000 $24,000
Century Circuit Company	101,630 80,300
Clare & Gade Realty Company	13,000 5,000
Capital Machine Company	33,950 20,000
Fairbanks Company	10,130 4,000
Fairbanks Company	262,890 170,000
Indianapolis Glove Company	149,819 120,680
Indianapolis Glove Company	128,820 54,400
National Veneer & Lumber Company	24,500 13,000
Park Laundry Company	125,960 80,000
Talge Maloney Company	26,150 13,000

Members of the board denied that McCloskey or his representatives had been refused admittance to the hearings at which reductions were made.

Calls it Courtesy

"Our meetings always have been open to the assessors' office, although the law does not require his attendance, and it simply is a matter of courtesy," Sloan said.

Reductions have been made without the presence of a representative from the assessor's office, it was admitted.

"The assessor's office knew the board was in session and would have attended the meeting without difficulty," Sloan declared.

Accusing the board of "ill-advised" action, McCloskey charged that "protests had been invited." Brattain denied this charge with the assertion:

"I don't remember inviting any one to appear before the board. We have had all we could handle without trying to get them in."

Zoercher Writes Sloan

After a personal visit by McCloskey, Philip Zoercher, chairman of the state tax board, wrote Sloan of the complaint.

"Word has come to us that information has gone around that the taxpayer need pay no attention to the notice given by the township assessor of an increase, for the reason that the board of review would restore the old figures," Zoercher wrote.

"Of course, if the value that the assessor has made can not be defended and is not correct, then the board of review should exercise its judgment, but there should be no reduction unless investigation is made and all parties given a chance to be heard."

what has come to be known as the "descriptive phrase" theory.

The beer control bill plainly defines "restaurant" as an eating place equipped to serve twenty-five "located within the corporate limits of any incorporated city or town."

Fry's ruling held that the latter merely is a "descriptive phrase" and not a "limiting clause" in the law.

So, by the same token, parts of the law prescribing that beer be sold in bottles can be interpreted as merely descriptive phrases regarding sale of bottled beers, and not a limiting clause forbidding sale of keg beer, it has been pointed out.

Section ten of the law lays down the rule for sale in bottles by brewers and importers, defining the case size to be not less than twenty-four twelve-ounce bottles, nor more than twenty-four bottles having cubic content of twenty-four fluid ounces.

Should the "heat" for a special draught beer session of the legislature become great enough, the excise director may use the "descriptive phrase" method of legislation, it was said.

McNutt stood alone against draught beer during the 1933 legislature. He based his opposition on the contention that it would bring back the barroom and would handicap repeal.

With repeal voted, this no longer holds, he has admitted.

from them and stop the telephone calls.

McNutt said he had been besieged by calls after the arrest, March 26, of Miss Winingham and Dr. Tell C. Waltemire, her employer. When the police were informed of the trip, the car was impounded and Miss Winingham's bond was raised.

Testimony regarding the alleged operation and Miss Jones' condition after a raid at the Pennsylvania street address by police was given by Dr. Virgil Noone and Dr. Jane Ketchum, city hospital physicians.

Sergeant Kent Yoh, in charge of the squad which convicted Waltemire's office of complaint of a disturbance by neighbors, told of finding records and instruments in the house.

A notebook containing names, dates and amounts was offered in evidence by the state, but, on objection by the defense, the record was confined to an entry of Miss Jones' name and an amount of $35, said by Miss Jones to have been the sum paid for the operation.

Detective Ed Tutt, testified that Miss Jones was found in an upstairs room of the hotel, in bed and "evidently suffering." Miss Winingham showed evidences of intoxication, and Dr. Waltemire was "raving drunk," Tutt declared.

code for all industry, Mr. Roosevelt observed:

"This agreement already has brought a flood of approval from every state, and from so wide a cross-section of the common calling of industry that I know it is fair for all."

"It is a plan—deliberate, reasonable and justintended to put into effect at once the most important of the broad principles which are being established, industry by industry, through codes."

"Naturally, it takes a good deal of organizing and a great many hearings and many months, to get these codes perfected and signed, and we can not wait for all of them to go through."

"The blanket agreements, however, which I am sending to every employer, will start the wheels turning now, and not six months from now."

To the millions of men and women wage earners affected by the codes, the President also had a definite message and a word of encouragement.

He declared that "the codes and the agreements already approved, or about to be passed upon, prove that the plan does raise wages and that it does put people back to work."

"You can look on every employer who adopts the plan as one who is doing his part," the President said, "and those employers deserve well of every one who works for a living. It will be clear to you, as it is to me, that while the shirking employer may undersell his competitor, the saving he thus makes is made at the expense of his country's welfare."

"While we are making this great common effort there should be no discord and dispute. This is no time to cavil or to question the standard set by this universal agreement. It is time for patience and understanding and co-operation."

"The workers of this country have rights under this law which can not be taken away from them, but, on the other hand, no aggression now is necessary to attain those rights. The whole country will be united to get them for you."

"The principle that applies to the employers applies to the workers as well, and I ask you workers to co-operate in the same spirit."

Pointing out that while he could not guarantee the success of the plan, the President asserted that the people could, expressing the belief that "we can greatly influence economic forces."

"I have no sympathy," he said, "with the professional economists who insist that things must run their course and that human agencies can have no influence on economic life."

Mr. Roosevelt began his address by accounting briefly for his stewardship during the last four months and a half. He reviewed the moves for strengthening the financial structure of the government and the nation through his administration's action in the banking situation and in reducing expenditures to meet income.

Then he traced the steps toward increasing the purchasing power of the farmer through a reduction of crop acreage and production.

"It is obvious," he said, "that if we can increase greatly the purchasing power of the tens of millions of people who make a living from farming and the distribution of farm crops, we greatly will increase the consumption of those goods which are turned out by industry."

EATS TOO MUCH MELON

Lee Daily, 40, Invokes Hospital Aid After Choking Spell.

Lee Daily, 40, of 1708 West Michigan street, couldn't agree with the doctors at city hospital Monday night. Despite that, Daily was back home today, very much alive and well.

Daily, eating watermelon, started choking and police were called. Daily said one of the seeds had caught in his windpipe. Doctors at city hospital said it hadn't. In fact, they brutally intimated that Daily merely had eaten too much watermelon.

At any rate, the doctors "repaired" Daily, and he went back home, looking for more watermelon.
