

Dog Graves. Abound in 'Pet Rest'

Mrs. W. R. Hirst Founder of Cemetery for Animals.

CHICAGO may have its "Orphans of the Storm." Irene Castle McLaughlin's refuge for stray dogs, and Hollywood and Washington their animal cemeteries with marble mansions. Indianapolis has Mrs. W. R. Hirst's "Pet Rest."

A huge boulder, marked with a dog's head, labels the two-acre plot, "A Final Resting Place for Our Faithful Friends." Flowers and visits to the graves prove the love of bereaved masters and mistresses. Rich men and poor men come to bow their heads in grief for blue-blooded prize winners and mongrel orphans who just came to the house and stayed.

A crudely made cement headstone is carved with the loving tribute of two little boys, "Rowdy, Our Pal" Mrs. Hirst provides a headstone with each grave, but these boys wanted to do this last little bit for Rowdy.

Tribute to Heroism

Heroism is paid respect at the grave of RX, the police dog of George Schilling, druggist. The words, "Died in Defense of His Master" tell the story of his attack of two burglars, who molested his master. RX leaped at the throat of one, and was shot. But the burglar was caught.

Among the newest graves are those of "Mary Pickford" and "Colonel," the horse and pony of Mrs. William Lov Rice and her daughter, Joan. Mary Pickford, a wedding present from Mr. Rice to his wife, and Colonel died in the fire at the Algonquin Riding Club stables, struck by lightning recently in a storm.

Three days a week, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Schumaker visit the grave of "Mike," their wire-haired fox terrier. Every Sunday dozens of persons come to put fresh flowers on the graves of their lost pets.

One man, 75 years old, without living kin, buried his dog and went away to take in seven little dogs, who wandered the streets without homes.

Mrs. Hirst came from Washington with her four dogs. She wondered what she would do if they should die. City ordinances prohibit burial of animals in yards. She wanted her pets buried as others of hers had been in Washington.

Cemetery Near Cumberland

It will be two years in October that she found the two-acre plot one mile east of Cumberland on Twenty-first street. The ground was plowed and grass seed sown. An iron fence was built across the front and back, honeysuckle, snowballs and other shrubs were planted to inclose the ground.

Creosoted coffins lined and cushioned are provided with the graves, but some owners buy specially made ones. One elaborate casket cost $155; others have silver handles and name plates.

Already 100 dogs have been interred at "Pet Rest," including those of Mrs. Henry M. Talbott, Mrs. Jesse Fletcher, Ralph Kane and Hubert Hickam. Beside Mrs. Rice's two horses and the dogs, there are two birds, a monkey and three cats.

The Stars Are Lacing Into Style

Accessories Add Chic to Elissa Landi's Gown

Elissa Landi

White lace gloves and a large, lace-trimmed chiffon handkerchief are about the most exquisite accessories a girl can wear with a white summer evening gown.

Elissa Landi wore a simple white evening gown of pebble crepe. A handsome jeweled clip fastened at the front of her V neckline and her gloves were lace, matching the design that trimmed her large chiffon handkerchief.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

If you are in need of sympathetic advice, bring your problem to Jane Jordan. Your letters will be answered in this column.

Dear Jane Jordan—I have been going with a boy for nearly two years. He is a nice boy and does not drink. He works very hard and his folks impose on him. He is 25 years old and I am 20. He doesn't talk much, but is not nearly so bashful as when we started going together. His friends have remarked how much I have longer.

JUST WONDERING.

Answer—I do not believe it would be of any benefit to you or your child to enter into another loveless marriage to gain a home. You have found that living together is an art which human beings find it difficult to master, even under favorable circumstances.

Marriage is not the only vocation open to you. You can work for your economic security. When it is attained, you won't be pressed to want into accepting a man who has no value in your eyes other than that of a meal ticket.

He is short and I am tall. My ideal is a tall fellow, interested in social events, and one who can dance. The boy friend is getting serious with me and wants me to marry him. Sometimes I feel as if I would like to, for I would like to have a home of my own.

On the other hand I'm afraid I wouldn't be satisfied, and spoil both of our lives. I don't want to disappoint him. He's never had a chance like other boys.

BLUE EYES.

Answer—Evidently this boy makes a strong appeal to your sympathies, even though he doesn't look like the fairy prince of your dreams. I do not feel that the young man should be judged by his height, but by the good solid qualities which he possesses. The social graces are easy to learn. He probably would blossom under your tutelage.

The danger seems to lie in the fact that you are more progressive and ambitious than he is. In old-fashioned parlance, you probably would have to wear the pants of the family. You'd always be obliged to take the initiative and supply the incentive.

In time you might grow weary of the task and lose the tenderness which has resulted from your championship of a down-trodden boy.

Somehow, I feel that you have accepted this boy because he is the only one who is available and you're afraid you never might have another chance. Since you're only 20, it would seem advisable to get out and meet other boys.

It doesn't seem fair to marry while you're in such an unsettled state. If time doesn't get stronger affection, you'd better not risk it.

Dear Jane Jordan—I was married to a man I loved when I was 18 and divorced when I was 22. During this time a darling baby girl came to make my home a heaven on earth, but the devil in shape of a woman stepped into our paradise just before my baby was born. I let him have his choice and he took the other woman.

Five months after my divorce, I married again. I wanted another home so badly and while I knew I never cared for my second husband, I thought if I had a home for my baby I could get something out of life.

I was married two weeks to my second husband when he informed me that he loved me, but he would not have my child under his roof, as it didn't belong to him. Well, that ended that marriage, as I love my little girl better than life.

I now am going with a fellow whom I like very much, but do not love. He wants me to marry him. My parents don't like him and of course that makes it harder. But do you think, after
