

RELIGIOUS JOB LOSER PLAYED IN COURTROOM

Judge Assails Father for Refusing Work Requiring Saturday Labor.

believes it possible for a member to find work not requiring labor on Saturday—his Sabbath.

He was interrupted by Deputy Prosecutor Edward Brennan.

"Do you realize there are 12,000,000 men out of work in the country?"

When Carrier suggested that "you people get him a job," Geckler said:

"I am as lazy as I can be. I don't want to work on Saturday, Sunday or any other day, but I believe that were children are involved, a man should work either Saturday or Sunday, or both, if necessary, to support them."

Carrier quoted the United States Constitution to show that Ashley has a right to observe his own religion as he pleases.

Geckler withheld judgment on a finding of guilty, requiring Ashley to pay into court $5 a week for support of his children.

"Go ahead and try to get a job and see how easy it is to get one without working on Saturday," Geckler admonished.

When the court said Ashley could do anything he wished about the finding, Carrier intimated he might carry the case to a higher court.

OPENS FIRST ROADSIDE AIRPLANE GAS STATION

Former Navy Speed Flier Starts System to Aid Fliers.

NEW YORK, July 31.—With the formal opening, at Hicksville, L. I., of the world's first roadside airplane filling station, Captain Alford J. Williams Jr., former navy speed flier and now directing aviation for an oil company has inaugurated a new type of service-to-fliers.

Likewise, this departure from dependence on airports for service comes as a boon to aviation unemployed. For, these service and filling stations are to be manned by unemployed airplane mechanics and riggers.

Within a few months, Captain Williams expects to have existing roadside service stations, where the touring flier can drop in for refueling and minor repairs.

He can read prices set in six-foot numerals, thereby shopping as he flies. Best of all, before very long one of these fifty-acre plots always will be in easy reach of those forgetful ones who fail to look at the gas before they start on a journey.

Captain Williams stated that this new idea came to him when a jobless mechanic asked for work of any sort. The man, Elton Babcock, former mechanic mate first class, had been a member on Captain Williams' racing crew during the speed trials in the navy.

STOICISM OF INDIANS Baffles White Man

Logic Shown on Death Certificates One of Puzzling Traits.

PHOENIX, Ariz., July 31.—The cryptic stoicism of the Indian has baffled his white caretakers, records here indicate.

White man's logic has yet to explain the phrase "they went over the river" discovered on five of 208 hitherto unrecorded Indian death certificates.

The five certificates read like this: "Name—Mary Nearcha Rockefeller. Husband, John D. Rockefeller. Age 52. Cause of death, she was over the river with the medicine men."

And again: "Name—Margaret Nearcha Haber. Husband, Armataba. Age 57. Cause of death, she was over the river with the medicine men."

Still again: "Name—Humthueythuay. Age 57. Cause of death, he was over the river with the medicine men."

The certificates were received from Mohave tribe chieftains.

Scores of the certificates disclosed the Indians died without medical attention.

The second day, Caroline caught three tarpon; her father caught nothing.

INVENTOR OF BICYCLE

Portrait Painter Used Vehicle to Cover Eastern Estate.

PHILADELPHIA, July 31.—Charles Wilson Peale, famous Revolutionary portrait painter, invented the bicycle.

According to letters written to his son, which now are in possession of James Starr, the painter developed the bicycle as an aid in covering distances on his estate. Belief Starr now lives in the old colonial mansion in the Germantown section of Philadelphia.

In the letter, yellowed with age, Peale had drawn sketches of the bicycle for his son, John.

Mama Robin Got Aid

MADISON, Wis., July 31.—Following the flight of a robin that brushed its wings repeatedly against his head and then flew away a short distance to return, George Falter, caretaker at a golf course here, discovered a fledgling just as it was about to be devoured by a snake.

When the Egyptian pyramids were built, there were no horses in all Egypt.

Guests Always 'Cooped Up' at Hotel—It's Chicken Residence

Roosters, Hens Occupy 500 Rooms With 'Comforts of Home.'

MIAMI, Fla., July 31.—"Please keep quiet, chickens upstairs," is the announcement which greets visitors to the huge, 500-room White House hotel here—where all the guests are roosters and hens.

In this hotel, the hen takes the precedence; roosters are killed off when their days proclaim them as palatable fryer possibilities. The hen queens it over all, and becomes the recipient of all the courtesies and attention which a hotel man confers only upon a favored visitor.

Upon her arrival from the baby chick room, where she was consigned when but a day old, her feathered highness is assigned to industrial quarters, a room tidy, cheerful and attractive, although but seventeen inches square.

Cackles, Lays Eggs

There her days are spent in laying eggs, in cackling and singing as animated and continuous as that of any participant in a tea party which might have been held on the lawn, were the hostelry filled with tourist guests.

If the newly arrived visitor does not take kindly to the food, or partake of a quantity sufficient to enable her to carry on her duties, the chef is consulted about a special diet.

Should another feathered guest refuse to take part in the social activities of the hotel, which in this case may be an egg-laying contest, she is sure to receive the cold shoulder from the more congenial and amenable arrivals, and is eventually frozen out.

When a visitor complains about the drinking water, either as to quantity or quality, that is soon remedied, for the little bubble fountains which provide the drinks may have become clogged.

Comforts of Home

Everything is done by the management to make the guests feel comfortable and at home. There is a continuous supply of scientifically balanced mash feed ration, and similarly a constant supply of flowing fresh water.

Lights are turned out at 9.30, for there is no reason why these indolent visitors should indulge in late hours. There is no place to go, and nothing to see, and since they must rise with the sun, and commence their daily tasks, the early bedtime was unanimously adopted. All a hen has to do is to eat, drink and sleep as much as she pleases—and lay eggs!

And some of them are mighty good at it, too. One sister has seventy-six eggs in fifty-two days to her credit, but the average fall into the 200 and 300 a year class.

Remodeled Hotel

When the constructive dream of M. R. Harrison of a 500-room tourist hotel in the metropolitan area came tumbling down during the depression, and which is now referred to as the "boom," Harrison was determined to put the huge caravansary to some more practical use than simply letting it rot and fall apart. Hence the Hen hotel.

Maximum egg production at a minimum cost was to be the prime objective of the new enterprise. The individual cage battery system was adopted for handling the flocks, one of the latest innovations evolved in modern poultry husbandry. This system virtually reduces commercial egg production to a factory basis.

The chicks reach the hotel when a day old, the stock coming from the Miami hatchery, and consists of pullets hatched from eggs of pedigreed hens of the Beal-Tancred strain of White Leghorns, all having trapnest records.

Within two weeks, the boxes containing 100, are thinned down to fifty chicks apiece, the thinning process continuing until gradually each hen acquires her own room, when her life's work begins.

The hotel, which was approximately 50 per cent completed when Harrison points out, is adapted ideally to the development of this rather unusual enterprise. There is perfect ventilation naturally afforded, and a minimum cost at which all sanitary necessities may be installed.

There is floor space adequate to accommodate 60,000 laying hens in cage batteries, besides room for rearing 20,000 fryers, and 50,000 baby chicks for annually replacing the laying flock and for all packing and shipping facilities.

He estimates that within the next two years he will have 10,000 laying hens (there are now 6,000); and that within seven years he will have the building filled to capacity—60,000 layers—which will at the same time furnish employment for from 75 to 100 persons.

Weeping Giant of Stone Found in Ancient Ruins

$300 GETS THEM

Discovery of Huge Statue in Andes Made by Anthropologist.

NEW YORK, July 31.—A weeping stone giant, twenty-four feet tall has been discovered at prehistoric ruins in the highlands of the South American Andes. Three big stone tears are carved on the giant's cheeks.

Discovery of the enormous statue, pronounced unique in size, is reported by Wendell C. Bennett, anthropologist of the American Museum of Natural History in a publication of the museum.

While he was digging at the famous ruins of Tiwanaco, near Lake Titicaca, Bennett struck stone, and uncovered the statue lying flat on its back. Prehistoric Indians who carved the idol gave it a head band with plumes, cloth trousers and a polka dot design, and a wide decorated belt. The hands are held before the chest and the left hand holds a cup.

When the great figure stood erect and looked tearfully down on the little humans who made it, it was in the center of a small temple.

Bennett estimates that the stone weighs eighteen tons. Indians of this part of South America had extraordinary skill, and art-like tendency which enabled them to handle enormous stones and to make them into gates, statues, and monumental walls.

WHAT ABOUT THE CODE?

Somebody Should Tell Roosevelt About this Double-Dealing Vine.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., July 31.—A vine that bears tomatoes at the top and potatoes under the ground at the roots is doing double duty for Sidney White, here.

Last year he grafted a tomato sprout on a potato vine and saved the potatoes that grew under the vine. The potato planted produced the vine bearing tomatoes at the top and potatoes under the ground.

The vine has leaves shaped like those of a tomato vine, and thick like potato leaves and having no stain or odor. This year the vine bore seven tomatoes and fourteen potatoes.

ment by Leon Worthall, spokesman of the Journeymen Barbers' International Union.

Indianapolis Barbers' Union, in an official statement today, stressed the point that one-chair shop owners will not be affected by the forty-hour-week provision in the barbers' code.

The forty-hour week provision applies only to employees, the statement said. Owners of one-chair shops will be forced only to observe the opening and closing hours, set by the code.

A petition is being circulated among Indianapolis barbers, pledging their support to President Roosevelt's emergency recovery drive. The petition, when fully signed, will be sent to Washington, union officials said.

Indiana is the second state in the union to put its employees on the new schedule. Following the example of West Virginia, employees of the statehouse is on a forty-hour week today.

A telegram announcing the acceptance by the state of the federal program was dispatched to Wayne Coy, secretary of Governor Paul V. McNutt. Coy said that no additional help is contemplated at present because of the lack of funds.

Adoption of the Roosevelt blanket code by Sears, Roebuck & Co., was announced to the store's employees and executives at a meeting presided over by John Burke, manager of the Indianapolis store. More than 200 attended the meeting.

ARTIST OF DEPRESSION

Losing Job Drives Man Into Success as Horn Carver.

HOUSTON, Tex., July 31.—Two years ago found Frank J. Janowski facing a crisis. He was jobless, had a wife and five children to feed and the depression in its gloomiest stage.

So he obeyed the promptings of an old hobby and today he is the sole owner of a permanent and profitable business—horn carving. Janowski is recognized as one of the most talented of horn carvers.

His little house and a large barn which he uses as a workshop are museums in which the whole scope of this curious art may be studied. Although most of his products are labeled chairs, hall trees, hat racks and so on, he is something of a modernist.

Not long ago he made a striking departure from old customs. Taking sections of ten dark horns, which he polished to jadelike smoothness, he fashioned them into a large nude figure of unusual design.

Kidnaping in City Is Laid to Bootleggers' Dispute

17-Year-Old Boy Victim Released With Warning After Abduction.

What loomed as a sensational kidnaping with a death threat hanging over the head of a 17-year-old Indianapolis boy, leveled itself today into what police said was a bootleggers' dispute.

Two cars Saturday afternoon pulled up in front of the poolroom owned by Thomas Malad, 3547 Massachusetts avenue. Mrs. Malad and her son Joseph, 17, was in the place.

Deny Abductors Had Guns

After asking for Malad, the men were alleged to have pulled revolvers and ordered young Malad into one of the two cars. The machines speeded away, and within a few minutes, police cars were on the trail.

An hour later Joseph Malad alighted from a street car near his home. He said the men had released him, denied any one had pulled a gun on him, and said the only threat he had received was a warning to "watch your step."

Almost at the same time, police arrested three men. One was Joseph's father, the other two were the alleged "kidnapers," Russell Miller, 35, of 1710 Ludlow avenue, and Claude Williams, 24, of 3833 East Thirty-first street. A fourth man is sought.

Statements of Trio Vary

Police say statements of the trio vary in important details. What it seems to be, according to the officers, is that some one stole five or six six-gallon cans of alcohol from Miller's garage. Miller suspected Dewey Brown, former employee of Malad, said police.

Miller went hunting for Brown, via Malad, they say, and picked the boy up as a half-way threat.

Miller is reported by police to have warned an uncle of young Malad that "Brownie had better get in touch with us within six hours, or you'll find the boy in the river."

The case was continued today in municipal court three until Aug. 10. By that time, police say, they may be able to get things straightened out.

the Hinkley home, to which the fugitive had returned.

First demands that Hinkley surrender were met with gunfire from the convict. None of the posse was hit, however.

As darkness fell the posse lighted highway flares and placed them around the house.

Hinkley reached through a window, grabbed one of the flares and set fire to a pile of boxes in the basement.

The fire department was called, and extinguished the blaze by pouring huge streams of water through the basement windows.

The sheriff's posse then tossed tear gas bombs into the basement, all the time keeping up a steady fire with shotguns. Hinkley still continued to return the gunfire, however.

Fire from the barricade ceased finally at about 10 Sunday night and possemen entered the bullet-riddled house to find Hinkley dead with the charges from two shotguns in his head.

Authorities from the state prison today said the convict's body would be returned to the prison for burial. Hinkley escaped from Michigan City after serving two months of a one to ten-year term on a criminal attack charge.
