

TEACHERS ARE BARRED FROM FORMING CODE

Interference With Local Governments Cited as Reason.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—School teachers want a code of fair competition with short work hours and minimum wages like every one else. They probably will not get one, because the National Recovery Administration takes the position that it can not suggest or dictate in any way to states, cities and other local governments what they should do about their employees.

Teachers in private institutions may have a somewhat better chance of regulation. Further, teachers as professional workers are excluded from the blanket code.

But Commonwealth college, the labor school at Mena, Ark., has written a code of fair standards for the education industry and has filed it with Recovery Administrator Hugh Johnson.

It provides a thirty-hour week for teachers, and limits class room attendance, so that unemployed teachers may be called back to work. It proposes minimum wages on a yearly basis, ranging from $1,600 for kindergarten teachers in towns of 30,000 population and over.

"The education industry employs more than 1,000,000 workers and has a plant in every town and township in the country, and is of the utmost importance in public welfare," says David Englestein, business manager and teacher at Commonwealth college, "and yet conditions therein are as chaotic as in any industry in the country."

"The fact that school teachers shine their shoes and wear collars does not mean that their position is any different from that of workers in other industries."

Englestein said that in April of this year ten million school children were unable to attend school because classes were not being held.

According to his figures, the average yearly wage of teachers in the United States has declined from $1,420 in 1930 to about $650 in the school year just ended, while the teaching load has increased more than 50 per cent.

There are approximately 200,000 school teachers unemployed at the present time. The daily cost of education per child has decreased from 62.8 cents to 46.7 cents since 1929.

ANNOUNCE NEW COURSE

Freedom in Selecting Studies Feature of New I. U. Offer.

By Times Special

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Aug. 4.—Announcement of a new two-year elective Indiana university course, with relaxed entrance requirements, has been announced here by Professor Edgar L. Yeager, chairman of a committee which drafted the course.

In addition to relaxed entrance requirements, the course provides more freedom in selecting studies, and is intended for students whose high school courses do not make them eligible to matriculate into other divisions of the university.

The two-year course is not expected to compete with Indiana university's four-year system. The course is not intended to be vocational in its aims, said Dr. Yeager.

U. S. RULES ON SALES TAX ON ARTISTS' WORK

Designers, Sketchers, Painters Are Exempt Under Decision.

By United Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 4.—The state department of finance drew a fine line of its own today in deciding what artists should and should not fall under the 2 per cent. sales tax. It held that artists occupied by designing, sketching, drawing or painting upon papers and canvases performed services not taxable under the new law. Sale of photographs, engravings, electrotypes, wood engravings and matrices, the department ruled, was subject to tax.
