

WHAT TO CAN, AND HOW

Pressure Cooker Suggested as Best for Nonacid Vegetables

This is the first of a series of six articles to be printed daily on The Times Woman's Page.

BY SISTER MARY
NEA Service Writer

This year most of us are practicing economy systematically and vigorously. Consequently, with fruits and vegetables coming into market in abundance and selling at low prices, the urge to can them for future use is strong.

First, here is a warning regarding the canning of nonacid vegetables. The safest way to can these vegetables is in a pressure cooker. Otherwise added acid in the form of lemon juice, which does not make the vegetables at all distasteful, and when a can is opened for serving, boil the vegetables ten or twelve minutes before seasoning them and sending them to the table.

If you have a garden in which you grow more vegetables than you can use, of course you will can the surplus. But if you must buy your vegetables, keep in mind that slogan, "an hour from garden to can," and purchase accordingly. Canning never improves the product and all fruits and vegetables must be fresh to be at their best.

Canned Foods Important

The question of what to can is naturally largely an individual one. There are 1,095 meals to be prepared during the year and if nutrition and economy are considered, canned foods will play an important part.

If you are a family of two or three it is sensible to can most fruits and vegetables in pint jars. A well packed pint jar will be sufficient for one meal, while a quart jar would be too much and the remainder might be wasted if not used quickly.

Even a family of four will find such vegetables as peas and lima beans packed in pint jars sufficient for their needs. The larger family will use quart jars to advantage.

How to Calculate Cost

In calculating the cost and your needs for the winter, the following table giving the approximate amounts which one bushel of fruits or vegetables will produce in canning may be convenient.

One bushel peas in the pod, 10 quarts or 20 pints.

One bushel beans (lima unshelled), 10 quarts or 20 pints.

One bushel beans (green or "string"), 15 quarts or 30 pints.

One bushel corn (husked), 6 quarts or 12 pints.

One bushel tomatoes, 16 quarts or 32 pints.

Fifteen pounds spinach, 5 quarts or 10 pints.

One bushel peaches, 18 quarts or 36 pints.

One bushel pears, 18 quarts or 36 pints.
One bushel plums, 20 quarts or 40 pints.
One bushel berries, 18 quarts or 36 pints.
The skill with which the can is packed, the size of the pieces and the quantity of syrup or juice has a direct bearing on the number of jars which can be produced.
