

RUG PRICES CLIMB WHEN COTTON COST AND WAGES START GOING UP LADDER

Floor Covering Which Sold for $90 in 1929 Drops to $24, Rises to $27; May Be $35 in Month.

This is the third of a series of news revealed in a survey of prices in city stores.

BY NORMAN E. ISAACS
Times Staff Writer

"Prices," said the rug man, "are going up. The rise in rugs is inevitable. For one thing, the prices on rugs dropped too low during the depression. Now they're coming back to their own and the rise is pretty steep."

Mr. and Mrs. Young America looked over some rugs admiringly. Mr. Young America just has gone back to work — thanks to President Roosevelt's National Industrial Recovery Act — and they're thinking of furnishing a little house, just a little one, all spic and span.

It looks as though he'll have a steady job, too. His boss has plenty of orders and things look much brighter than they did a year ago, or two years ago, or even three years ago.

Rugs Cost More

"Sure," said the rug man, nodding his head. "A lot of men have gone back to work in the rug business, too. There's cotton in this rug you're looking at, and wool and thread and a lot of other materials you never even think about."

"Back in 1929, I was selling this rug for $90. Last month I sold one like it for $24. Today, it cost $27. Next month, I think it may cost about $35."

"Normal price? Oh, I'd say around $60. I was selling it once for $195. Now it costs $130. Last month I was charging $120."

"The manufacturer is charging no more for it. When the President's blanket code went into effect the manufacturers had to raise pay all along the line. The textile industry stepped up pay and the cost of cotton the manufacturer was buying went up accordingly."

Manufacturer Asks More

"What with the cotton price rise and his price rises for his other raw materials, and with the increased money he was paying his own employees, he has to ask me for more money."

"Now, I've got several employees. For instance, the stock boy. I was paying him $10 a week. I've raised him to $15 under my pledge to the NRA. That increases my costs. I have to add a little more to the price of the rug. Up goes the price. "You're going to buy a rug. You buy this one, perhaps. I've got to order a replacement. If I sell ten or twenty runs this week, I've got to order that many replacements. "Other dealers over the country are doing the same thing. The manufacturer has orders. He orders more cotton, more wool, more thread, and perhaps he hires fifty or sixty more workers. Cotton orders pile up in the cotton factories and perhaps more will go to work there. That's the cycle of the thing."

No Unfair Practices

"The only thing I haven't mentioned is that if others make money, they'll buy, too, and both my business and your business will be good. We'll both make more money. "The President's code is a wonderful thing, and our rug code is, too. There are no more 'unfair practices' in the rug business. The wholesaler can't give discounts and rebates and all the little tricks he once had to resort to. "Those things we used to call unnecessary evils are all wiped out. It's a whole lot fairer. The wholesaler now doesn't have to worry about some other wholesaler coming behind his back and 'cutting his throat.' "Things are equalized a whole lot and it makes things easier for him and for me. I've spent a whole lot of money lately buying rugs from the wholesaler. He tells me prices are going way up. He didn't have to tell me. I've got some rugs that I can sell at fairly reasonable prices."

Business Gets Better

"When I order again, prices will be way up. But business really has been better and things look a whole sight more cheerful. Why, do you know, I've sold more rugs in the last two months than I did in the whole five preceding them. "Sure, now's the time to buy. It's not propaganda. What good would it do me to buy a whole lot of stuff and hold it, praying that nobody will buy and that when prices go up I'll make a real cleanup? "If no one buys, prices aren't going up. My business doesn't depend on price. It depends on volume. The little fellow is buying now. That's what counts. "He's buying. That makes me buy. That means the manufacturer has to buy. Listen, they're calling this thing artificial. Artificial or not, there's business in the air and the wheels are turning. "If you ask me, it's just what we needed. We're going places now. But listen, friend, buy now."

FISH FRY IS PLANNED

Ninth Annual Three-Day Event Planned by West Park Christians.

Ninth annual fish fry of the West Park Christian church will be given Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights at Washington street and Belle View place.

Dinner will be served each night between 5:30 and 7, with a musical program by the Schilling concert orchestra. Other musical programs will be given by the Odd Size quartet, the Sahara Grotto drum corps and Clarence Harding and his Blue Ridge Mountain girls.

Plans are being made to accommodate approximately 40,000 persons during the three nights and proceeds will go to the church building fund.

FARM CREDIT UNION FORMED

Branches of 28 Units in State Organized to Aid Growers.

Credit unions of twenty-eight farm bureau units will form the membership of a state-wide credit union organization to aid farmers, according to C. H. La Selle, representative of the Indiana Farm Bureau Co-operative Association. It will be known as the farm Bureau Co-operative Credit Union Association of Indiana.

"The purpose is to promote interest and co-operation among various county farm bureau co-operative credit unions and to assist the other counties of the state in co-operative finance activities," La Selle stated. "It will take a leading part in legislative matters affecting the farm credit and financial situation."

The state body will do collective purchasing of necessary supplies and will establish a uniform system of accounting for member units. Any farm bureau credit union in the state is eligible to membership. Officers of the organization are: La Selle, president; A. S. Carter of Evansville, vice-president, and Miss Nondas Jefferson of Wabash, secretary-treasurer.

REVISE SYSTEM ON PRISON MADE GOODS

McNutt Takes Action to Comply With Codes.

Indiana's penal population is not included under NRA provisions, but the NRA and the Hawes-Cooper act, which will be effective next year, have resulted in plans for changing the present prison goods manufacture in the state, Governor Paul V. McNutt announced today.

McNutt said he had been advised by NRA officials in Washington that there is nothing in the recovery act, apparently, to prevent states using penal labor in manufacturing anything desired, but that some codes, when approved, may prevent private industry from using prison labor to produce its products.

This has resulted in decision to concentrate on articles which can be used by the state in its various institutions and by its political subdivisions, such as shirts, overalls, soap and similar articles, replacing to a large extent article at present manufactured for the public through private contract.

The Hawes-Cooper act permits legislatures to regulate sale of prison-made goods from other states within their own states. This will reduce sales of Indiana prison products in other states.

The Governor said the Indiana state prison will concentrate on manufacture of soap and a few other articles. A bid to furnish supplies for various institutions, including the universities, is being installed at the prison.
