

'Daughter Like Mother,' Story of Golf Success of Roberta Denham, 15

Tudor Hall Sophomore Breaks 100, Wins Match in Tourney, So She'll Get a New Set of Clubs.

Times Woman's Page Editor

"Like mother, I be daughter," tells the story of Roberta Denham, 15-year-old Tudor Hall sophomore. Roberta is attracting attention on the golf course of the Indianapolis Country Club, and her mother, Mrs. Robert Denham, has been one of the club's consistently good players for the last four years.

Roberta is waiting to pick out a new set of clubs, which her father promised her when she broke a hundred and when she won a match in a tournament. She's done both now—having turned in a 94 and defeated Mrs. Harry Reiser in the recent championship tournament at the club. Roberta finally was downed by Mrs. Edward Denae in the semi-finals.

She Was Too Young. Roberta played a few rounds last year, but her serious playing just began this year. She wanted to enter the state tournament for the experience, but her age was against her. "I was too young," she fretted.

Roberta is the only 15-year-old player who has entered any of the tournaments. She played in the city tournament and made a good showing against experienced players. "I was nearly petrified with fright," she confessed. "But I won't be next time."

During the season she's reduced her handicap from 33 to 15, and it daily practice will help her hopes to cut it down even more.

Roberta well may be called an all-round athlete. When she was 11 she rode in horse shows. She spent hours on the bridge paths of the Algonquin Riding Club, and won ribbons in swimming meets at the Indianapolis Country Club.

Roberta's 11-year-old sister Patricia is not outdone by her sister. Her most precious possession is the felt Seahorse emblem on her sweat shirt. She won it because she passed all the tests required of the Seahorse Club at the Indianapolis Athletic Club.

Besides that, she has her name engraved on several of the bronze plaques at the club, which denote proficiency in swimming. "I never cared much for swimming until Dick Papenguth pushed me in the pool once," Patty chattered. "I floundered around a little and I liked it."

Patty had some good instructions one summer when she was vacationing at Lake Chautauque, N. Y. The swimming instructor of Yale university was there and he trained her in some of the fundamentals.

One of Patty's heroines is Elizabeth Dunn. She is hoping to be a good golf player, because "Elizabeth promised to teach me." She's been playing a little this summer with her mother and Roberta, and they proudly watch her progress.

Mrs. Denham was responsible for both her daughters' interest in golf, and, besides that, she aroused her husband's interest in the game.

Ina Claire's Sailor Hat, a 'Knockout' in Headgear, Shown by City Milliner

Model Is in French Room at Block's; Cotton Bedspreads Are Winning High Favor With Housewives.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

THE sailor hat that tops Ina Claire's distinctive blonde coiffure in many of her pictures was designed for her by Pappé, a Parisian designer. It was so popular with Miss Claire that she had the hat copied in four models. One is a black velvet and the others are felt. The model is shown in the French room millinery at the William H. Block Company, in a beautiful quality of black velvet. It is a sailor, with the back of the straight brim cut out, and two small little black ostrich tips curved over this back opening. The crown is low and creased, and the hat, if worn as Ina Claire affects it, will be tilted well over the eyes. The brim of the hat is faced with a smooth black felt.

Cotton Bedspreads Popular

FOR the decoration of colonial rooms in many homes this year, cotton bedspreads have been popular, embroidered by needlewomen of the south, who have retained the art of their ancestors, and have been able to reproduce it in copies of many of the fine old counterpanes used in colonial times.

The most distinctive of these bedspreads were designed by Anne Orr editor of the needlework department of Good Housekeeping magazine. Miss Orr has made a specialty of designing quilts and bedspreads, and is a recognized authority on the old-fashioned designs seen on many of them.

The bedspreads designed by her are carried exclusively at L. S. Ayres and Company in Indianapolis. They bear her distinctive trade mark, and are seen in designs which are developed in tufting, punchwork and twigwork. Candelwicking is used for carrying out the embroidery design.

They are made of cotton materials, in bright, fast colors.

Ox Blood Color Long Kept Secret

THE famous ox blood color, which has been produced only in the pottery made by the Royal Doulton potteries, at Burslem, England, was a guarded secret of Chinese manufacturers for many years. English and German makers of china experimented in many ways to reproduce this particular shade of rich red, but were unable to do it.

Finally Bernard Moore of the Doulton potteries discovered that the Chinese were able to obtain this peculiar shade of pottery from a coloring made from the crushed bodies of small Chinese beetles.

Since that time, Rouge-Flambee, or Flame Doulton, has been the most noteworthy product of the Doulton potteries.

Henry Doulton was knighted in 1887 for his services to the ceramic art. This was an honor that never before had been bestowed on an English potter. During his life he received no fewer than 105 diplomas of honor, 110 gold and 102 silver medals. He died in 1897.

A collection of Royal Doulton pieces always is on display at Charles Mayer & Co. It is one of the largest displays in the pottery and china department, and a number of specimens of Flame Doulton are shown.
